California's art colony is giving an exhibition this month in the main gallery of the Museum of History, Science and Art at Exposition Park. It is the Los Angeles Institution that promises to grow in importance until it rivals the annual exhibits of London.

There are thousands of people in Los Angeles who have never visited an art exhibit. They imagine they must take a trip East in order to do so, unaware that an exhibition even more meritorious than many of those which attract attention in eastern art centers is now open right at their doors.

Southern California, by reason of its wonderful natural beauties, is now the permanent abode of the greatest landscape painters of America. The Southwest is a treasure land for artists. It is rich alike in atmosphere and tradition. But the Southland artists live as a class apart, convinced that the public is unappreciative.

ALL HAVE MERIT.

There are more than a hundred canvases on display, not one without merit; for each is the expression of an artist's dream of the beautiful. Here are, as the artist sees them, the Grand Canyon, Yosemite, the lakes of the high Sierras, the snow-tipped peaks of the Minarets, the sunny skies of Southern California in all their varying moods, the blue Pacific in sunlight and moonlight, agitated by the storm gods and in somnolent repose, groves of eucalypti and live oak, sheltered canyons where one can almost hear the rippling of the running water, reminiscenses of Indian life and the Spanish occupation, garden nooks where bloom gorgeous flowers and where red-lipped maidens enjoy a siesta under shaded terraces, portraits of virile men and of langorous women, happy children playing in the sunlight, groups in bronze and marble that the compatriots of Phidias might have envied.

Some are a riot of sunlight and color; others have the subdued pastel shades that recall faded tapestries.

The man or woman whose pulse will not beat faster in anticipation of such a delectable vision of beauty "is fit for treason, strategem and spoils."

The gallery is open afternoons on Sunday and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. every week day except Wednesday.

I shall attempt to interpret the message that I have received from a few canvases taken at random without reference to the reputation of the artists. And I have scrupulously avoided discussing any painting with its author, for I desire to record the impression I receive, without regard to the one the artist intended to convey.

In this way alone can I place myself in the position of the observer. My judgments are not final. What I condemn others with a more delicate and cultured artistic flair may find worthy of commendation. One of the greatest charms of visiting an art exhibition is to find some canvas, hanging perhaps in an obscure place, that conveys to you a message that the critics and the less discriminating observers have failed to interpret.

My personal opinions of painting and scupiture are formed from observation and reflection. I follow no single cult or school, but it has been my privilege to inspect many of the permanent exhibitions of the East and Europe. I approach a picture intent on interpreting its message. I regard first the form, color, light and shade. They comprise the surface, and should awaken in the observer some ideal of the beautiful in its various manifestations. If I find my inner self out of harmony with it, I know I shall never pierce the veil that hides from me the soul of the artist, and I pass on to another, conscious that the fault is very probably with myself.

THE ARTIST'S QUEST.

It is well to remember that, whatever the subject, a painter reveals his soul only to those who are capable of comprehending and loving the subtleties and the tenderness of the mysterious and the beautiful. Where the materialist sees only form, color, light and shadow, those possessing the true poetic vision discover a dream of beauty, inaccessible to the vugiar intellects that never rise above the commonplace; so mired in the conventional that art must always remain to them a dead language.

No painting is static. Although the canvas is attached to the wall, every color is a vibration that radiates from the surface of the picture to the retina of the eye. They pos-

PRICELESS SHELLS IN MUSEUM.

History of Earth Shown on Surfaces of Numberless Specimens in Southwest Collection; Classification and Gathering Work of Years.

BY HENRIETTA BOECKMAN.

A tiny shell found on a remote island or a thousand miles inland ofttimes tells on its unwritten surface more of history relating to both geology and ethnology than might be read in any volume in any library.

Shells discovered on the shores of San Nicolas Island, famed as the loneliest spot in the world, at once led to the conclusion through their duplication on the California coast, that the Channel Islands, to which group San Nicolas belongs were at one time a part of the mainland. Shells unearthed from the Indian graves in Iowa, Minnesota and other parts of the East correspond in every detail with those native to the West Indies, leading to the deduction that in ancient times these shells were transported by the Indians, either through Mexico or around by the way of Siberia.

In a great chamber of the Southwest Museum are found specimens of these shells, forming a part of one of the three largest shell collections in this country, and standing in a class of its own by reason of unequaled display qualifications, all of which is due to the years of labor withou monetary recompense, on the part of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Golish, whose donation this collection is to the museum.

SEEK MORE SHELLS.

Although this prodigious collection, resulting from some fifteen years of labor, is already overflowing its bounds in the great conchology chamber at the Southwest Museum, Mr. and Mrs. Golish have this month left for a journey of almost a year's duration, the greater part of which time they will employ in collecting more shells in Cuba, the Isle of Pines and Florida with several weeks spent in Washington, D. C., for the further study of shells and consultation with Dr. W. H. Dall, head of the Department of Conchology at the Smithsonian Institution for half a century, and who is considered the greatest conchologist. New York and Philadelphia will also be included in the itinerary.

The amazing completeness and perfection of display embodied in the Golish shell collection attracts travelers and students from all parts of the world. When visiting the Smithsonian Institution or the Academy of Sciences at Philadelphia, where the two rival shell collections are housed, the layman must accost an attendant, state the family or genus to which the shell belongs which he wishes to see, and be led to the drawer wherein it is put away. And so he must go from drawer to drawer, whereas in the Golish collection all of the shells are fully displayed in glass cases for immediate and complete inspection.

It has been the endeavor of Mr. Golish to show the complete development stages of a shell, from infancy to maturity, as well as the smallest and largest shells, and also any which are peculiar among their kinsmen. It is not the size of a shell which shows its development: this is judged entirely by its appearance. In the forming of this superb collection, the donors eliminated any duplicate shells.

"The greatest task involved in this collection," said Mr. Golish, "is not in the actual collecting, but in keeping up the collection scientifically. Families are changed, others combined. Constantly this changing is taking place at Washington. This is one reason for our visit to the capital. Another is that we have in this collection a number of specimens of coral and sponges from California waters which are not catalogued and which we shall take to Washington, believing them to be entirely new to sicence."

It was due to the zealous efforts of Dr. Hector Alliot, first curator of the Southwest Museum, that the Golishes were persuaded to donate their remarkable shell collection to the museum in 1914.

"My husband has been working on the collection every day since then until 10 and 11 o'clock at night, sometimes having his meals brought to him at the large table where he works at home," said Mrs. Golish, industrious helpmate in shell discovery and dissection.

The microscopic section of the shell collection, much of which was dredged for by the Golishes at both Los Angeles Harbor and Catalina, has not yet been placed on exhibition, as the government is revising this division of conchology. In due time these also will be displayed with all the ingenuity and preciseness which characterizes the entire Golish collection.

All the shells from this vicinity included in the collection were secured by the Golishes themselves. Some of the rarest shells have been obtained a mile or two from Redondo Beach, and there is a current so swift that fishing nets cast therein often are torn. This channel is forty fathoms deep, and on its banks are deposited shells of exquisite shape and coloring, closely resembling those from Japan. These shells were drawn up in the trammel nets used by fishermen until the government forbade their use.

From Los Angeles Harbor there is group of shells taken from a depth of 1500 feet, where the water is ice cold and all is in darkness. These shells are shaped for withstanding the enormous pressure. In the warm waters at Newport Beach flourish the pectan family, or scallop shells, all brilliantly hued. These pectans move through the water by means of clapping together their pairs of shells, which are not unlike a pair of hands. They do this in so lively a manner as to escape capture by hands.

In Catalina waters dwell the rare and remarkable argonantidae, or paper sailor. The female alone builds a lovely house, laying her eggs therein, while the male lives much as an octopus. These paper sailors sell for $1 per inch and are found after a storm.

OWN RARE SHELL.

The cancellaris is one of the rarest shell families of the Pacific, and in one of the latest government bulletins on conchology is found the photogether and description of the world's largest and finest of this family which belongs to the Golish collection. This specimen came from Monterey, but most of the family come from Redondo and Newport beaches.

Most of the foreign shells in this vast collection were obtained direct, though some have been added through a system of exchange with other collectors. From the world's warmest waters—the Gulf of California, Florida and especially Japan—come the loveliest shells. The West Indies furnished much of the coral in the collection.

Though the same kind of shell may be picked up on the coast of Alaska as on that of China, each looks quite different, the one from China being far more artistic and beautiful than the homely and brittle shell from the cold North. Size, too, is thus affected. Take, for example, the cup-and-saucer family of shells on which group Mr. Golish especially prides himself, those from the Gulf of California are much larger than those found in the cooler waters of Los Angeles Harbor. As with birds and fish, so with shells, the most colorful dwell in the warmer zones.

IN TWO CLASSES.

There are two great classes of shells, the land and the water shells,

POWER SCHEME PERILS SHOWN.

League Urges Home Needs be Cared for First.

Assails City's Plan to Grab Colorado Energy.

Danger of Tax Raise Here is Pointed Out.

Voicing the plea that no great municipal undertaking be launched that might interfere with the completion of the Aqueduct power program, erection of new schools, expansion of the harbor and enlargement of the police and fire departments, a statement by Attorney Oscar Lawler was issued yesterday through the People's Economy League. Mr. Lawler laid stress on the fact that the city and county will each have to build a new jail and sounded a warning that county officials deem it necessary in the near future to raise the tax rate.

"Los Angeles," said Mr. Lawler, "should avoid encumbering itself with the vast indebtedness necessary if it should undertake the Boulder Canyon power project. It is nothing short of ridiculous for this city to rush into such an expenditure when it is in such need of funds with which to meet ordinary municipal requirements, not to speak of the completion of our Aqueduct power development program, the building and equipping of more public schools, harbor expansion, providing police protection sufficient to stay the imminent wave of crime, and the enlargement of the fire department.

"And this warning should be sounded. A high county official is reported as stating that unless serious retrenchment is accomplished, Los Angeles county soon would be forced to a $5 tax rate! Should such a rate come, outside investors certainly would avoid Los Angeles county.

"Before Los Angeles city seeks to develop hydroelectric power outside of California, let it complete the development of the power program to which it already is committed. Let the city demonstrate its ability to make the Aqueduct power department pay for itself. The proponents of the Boulder Canyon power scheme declare that the Aqueduct power is paying for itself, but, if it is, then why don't they show the people how much, if anything, the power is earning on the people's millions invested therein?

"The Public Service Department's own figures show that only 72,000 out of the 250,000 horsepower of electrical energy possible to be developed on the Aqueduct and Owens River has so far been made available for use. This, I understand, is to be raised soon to 80,000. Let's develop and pay for the remainder of that 250,000 horsepower before seeking new power worlds to conquer.

"Our city and county jails are unfit for use. The city and county are faced with the necessity for building at least one and probably two new jails. This is only another of the projects that would be held up if Los Angeles approaches this Boulder Canyon project as a municipal undertaking."

LOCAL LAW GRADUATE WEDS BERKELEY GIRL.

Ray Morrow, a graduate of the University of Southern California college of law, and Miss Marion Towson, who was graduated by the University of California, were married at the home of the bride's parents in Berkeley Thursday. Allan P. Davenport of Los Angeles was best man. The cardinal and gold colors of the local university and the blue and gold of the northern school were blended in the wedding decorations. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow are to make their home in Glendale after the honeymoon which is to be passed in the north. The alumni of the college of law of the University of Southern California are planning a reception for Mr. Morrow when he returns.

DOLL .. SALE .. TO .. AID .. BABIES.

Florence Crittenton Home to Hold Bazaar This Week.

Two of the Beneficiaries-to-Be.

When the Florence Crittenton Home Auxiliary holds its annual bazaar and doll carnival Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the three finest dolls in this city will be sold to the highest bidders. Two of the dolls are known as Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, and both were contributed by the celebrated film stars whose names they bear. The other beautiful doll has been given the name of Patricia. She is a plaything that has been the proud possession of Charles Pyle's daughters. They are now donating it for the benefit of Florence Crittenton Home, which is conducted as a maternity hospital and boarding school for babies, and is supported wholly by voluntary contributions.

Mrs. Henry M. Hurd, vice-president and secretary of the institution, states that the bazaar and doll sale will be conducted at 838 South Hill street, and that it will be open afternoon and evening, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

In addition to the 800 dolls which will be sold for Christmas presents, the women who so generously donate their time and energy to the home will offer for sale homemade jams, jellies, preserves and other cooked foods. Those who crave amusement will find it at the Country Store, where everything from stewed prunes to sweet cider will be offered for sale.

Perhaps the greatest attraction of the bazaar will be the baby show each afternoon, from 2 to 3:30 o'clock. The babies of the home will be guests of honor. Mrs. Hurd states that the home has taken care of eighty-six girls and women and seventy-three babies during the last twelve months.

LAUNDRIES TO BE HOSTS.

Public Invited to Visit Plants Here During This Week.

This week is National Laundry Week. Honoring the occasion, the Columbia, Angelus and Sterling laundries, "three laundries under one roof," will hold a public reception throughout the entire week.

As a special feature J. J. Hutchinson, manager of the laundries, announces a demonstration test of Borromite soft water compared with city water. Housewives are to be shown the advantages of soft water and why it means longer life to linens. Another interesting phase of laundering is the Columbia laundry's system of washing clothes without marking.

In reply to a query as to how to reach the Columbia, Angelus and Sterling plants, Mr. Hutchinson advises motoring south on San Pedro street to Clanton street, then one-half block east. Clanton is a short street running parallel to and between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets.

DEFIANT HUSBAND LEARNS LAW POINTS.

Oscar Vogel wrote his wife, Alice Vogel, in Seattle, that he would not pay her a cent. In Judge Toland's court yesterday, where he was ordered to pay her $10 a week temporary alimony, Judge Toland said he assumed that Mr. Vogel did not know the law of the land, otherwise "I would take a more stringent view of the matter."

The evidence showed that Mrs. Vogel was in Seattle without funds to come to Los Angeles in which city her husband had been located.

Final argument on the motion for a separate trial for Mrs. Madalynne Obenchain, accused with Arthur C. Burch of the murder of J. Belton Kennedy, was continued yesterday by Judge Reeve upon the request of defense counsel. Mrs. Obenchain, through her counsel, Warren L. Williams and Ralph Obenchain, her former husband, seeks a separate trial on the ground that the prosecution probably will introduce in evidence a so-called confession made by Burch, which is said to implicate her without being binding upon her as a matter of law.

Mr. Williams stated to the court that he has received a telegram from Attorney Charles E. Erbstein of Chicago, stating the latter will arrive at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow and that he desires to be present at the argument on the motion. Dist.-Atty. Woolwine stated that he believes the defense has "all the time they are entitled to in the case," and urged an immediate decision.

Without strenuous argument the case was continued until 4 p.m. tomorrow. It was stated by the court that a decision on the motion will be forthcoming at that time, whether Mr. Erbstein is present or not.

The court selected twenty additional talesmen for the venire from which the Obenchain-Burch jury, or juries, will be drawn. This makes a list of sixty-one. From the sixty-one selected, the jury to try the first of the two cases, if separate trials are allowed, will be chosen.

The trial of the murder charge is set for November 1. It was intimated that, in case separate trials are granted by the court, Burch will be tried first.

ENGLISH TEACHERS IN SERVANT CLASS.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE IS NOT ENFORCED IN BRITAIN, SAYS BEACH GIRL.

Compulsory education laws in England which do not enforce attendance at school and a system which tends to encourage existing class distinctions, is the report of English education given yesterday by Miss Ruth E. Guild, Long Beach high school teacher, who has just returned from London.

"It required more than two weeks to arrange for a visit to an English school. I applied first to the London County Council, where a stenographer, after much questioning, grudgingly gave me two cards of introduction which were to be sent to the head mistresses of the schools I wished to visit. I was cautioned to wait for an appointment before going to the schools. After a week in one instance and nearly two in the other I received notes appointing the day and hour for my visit, and requiring an acceptance of the date. When I arrived, the school had had two or three weeks to prepare for my coming."

Separate education of boys and girls is the custom throughout England. Boys under the direction of a head master and girls under the direction of a head mistress occupy separate floors in the London County Council schools.

"Teaching requirements are much less strict in England than those in force in most sections of the United States," said Miss Guild. London University seems to be one of the few institutions outside of the Scotch universities that confer degrees upon women. At Oxford and Cambridge women can take courses, but they are not permitted to take the final examination for a degree.

"Probably the lower educational standards required in a teacher in the public schools has something to do with the attitude of the English toward teachers. They are classed socially with nurses for children and maids in homes, and they seem to feel this class distinction. The pay that they receive is closely related to this classification. English school-teachers with whom I talked could not understand how so many American school-teachers found it possible to afford European travel."

Free public schools in London are of three classes: The London County Council school, which has seven forms of standards, corresponding roughly to the grades in the American grammar school; the central school, a new experiment, and the secondary school. Students must leave the County Council school at the age of thirteen, whether they have completed the work or not.

The unfailing courtesy of the English people impressed Miss Guild during her tour of England.

"They seem to feel themselves hosts to all visitors," she commented, "and they do everything possible to make it pleasant for the traveler. They always recognize American tourists.

"Of course it is partly by their dressing that American tourists are recognized. Americans, both men and women, are known as the best-dressed people in the world. This is the opinion I heard expressed not only in England, but in France, as well. The English are inclined to be dowdy in their dress.

"The labor situation is a question troubling the English nation. Men seem to be worried over the numbers of women in industrial work, and say that while there are countless men out of work, women have little difficulty in finding employment, possibly because of the lower scale of wages paid to women."

are the rare and costly Golish collection, but more fascinating history of cypraea aurautium, a golden color, its of that gorgeous or gold-banded lily This shell has its habitat water of Loyalty Island, group, and is regarded as a sacred shell. time when Robert Louis was living at Samoa, and during a period of much disturbance on the island, when American, English and German men o' war were lying in the harbor, a native ruler, out of gratitude to the English ship for remaining a year while the other ships had gone home, gave to one of its officers the largest of his collection of these choice shells. The English officer, being much impressed by the beauty and exceptional size of the shell, asked for another, but though many divers were sent down, no more like it were discovered. The widow of this officer came to live at Long Beach and the shell was disposed of to an employee in a shell store there. The proprietor refused to pay the price it had been bought for, and in this manner did it reach Mr. Golish, who gave $50 for it.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Golish have discovered shells hitherto unknown to conchology. Mr. Golish found one on a rock at Santa Monica. It was on the beach at San Nicholas that Mrs. Golish found what she instantly knew to be a new shell though it was very small and its variation very slight. It is the only one of its kind known.

Shells for the Golish collection are never accepted unless alive, that is the animals must still be in them, since a few days of exposure on the beach ruins the color and luster of a shell. Upon capture, the shell with its animal is boiled, the fine natural luster of the shells at the Southwest Museum shows the result. On certain shells the epidermis is difficult to retain, necessitating boiling in glycerine to keep it from chipping off.

Shell collectors well know the importance of selecting the proper time for shell hunting. At certain times of the year shells come into spawn.

"We found 600 of a fine variety on a certain day on the rocks at Los Angeles Harbor," said Mr. Golish, "while on the next day that same group probably was far away."

The government has a large boat named Albatross, which dredges for shells to a depth of 10,000 feet for the national museum. Often rare shells are found in the stomachs of fishes.

Shells, no matter how microscopic they may be, never interbreed. A shell when broken will, oddly enough, go in quest of lime or whatever is required for mending. many interesting specimens illustrating this strange capacity of shells being found at the Southwest Museum. In any one kind of shell variety is given by the amount of food and coloring matter available.

ENLARGE HOUSES.

As the occupant of a shell matures, so does it enlarge its "house," and the marks of these additions are discernable on many shells. All members of the oliva and cupraea families wear a mantle which polishes the shell continually to ward off foreign substances. Other shell-housed animals that crawl along the sea bed, collect on their backs other shells under which to hide. One such clever shell is commonly called the conchologist, rare shells being sometimes found on his "roof." Some shells attach a tuft of moss to themselves and crawl all about with a burden many times their size.

All shells when young are free swimmers. When matured they settle, some inside of other shells as in the case of the blister pearl inside the abalone. The pest that forms the bump in the abalone called the blister pearl bores in through the shell; that forming the seed pearl, gains admittance through the intestines of the abalone.

Almost all shells have egg cases and when born can swim. Shells are great travelers. A colony of 1000 razor clams upon being disturbed jumped a foot or two into the air and across about three feet, making a swift and spectacular migration. Groups of abalones have been seen crossing sand bars.

Some shells are carnivovous, boring holes into other shells by means of acid and siliceous teeth, together with a rasplike tongue, and then running a syphon down to secure the meat. Limpids live on the seaweed within reach of their tongues, each mouth being equipped with 160 rows of teeth, twelve teeth in every row, making 1920 teeth in all.

COVER ESCAPE.

Some internal shells look like mere lumps of jelly, giving no hint of the shell inside. At both La Jolla and Newport Beach exist many of the curious violet snails, which build rafts of blubber three or four times as large as their shells, laying eggs beneath. During times of storm or when otherwise disturbed these snails throw off as much as a spoonful of fluid which colors the water a deep violet and permits them to escape.

A collector is a collector born, Mr. Golish declares. As a lad in Minnesota, he spent all his spare time among the Indians, collecting not only various objects but much information. It was not until Mr. and Mrs. Golish came to California seventeen years ago, however, that they found shells their leading interest, keeping at one time a shell store. When this was sold, the choicest specimens were retained, and it was with this as a nucleus that the present uneclipsed Golish collection was begun.

The Conchology Club of the Southwest Museum, which is one of the oldest clubs of its kind in the United States, meets every second Tuesday of each month at the museum.

WEDS PATIENT IN SANATORIUM.

Long Beach Teacher Becomes Bride to Change Jobs.

Husband Broke Down Under Work for Sick Folk.

Held Important New Mexico Posts; Fought Flu.

Long Beach has lost a teacher, Los Angeles has gained one, and John Tombs, patient in the La Vina Sanatorium, has won his bride as the result of a ruling of the Long Beach Board of Education. Friends of Miss Mary Frisbie of Long Beach learned yesterday of her marriage on Wednesday, several months earlier than she had planned.

A clause in the Long Beach board's contract which states that the marriage of a woman teacher shall be considered a resignation, and the ruling of the Long Beach school department that Miss Frisbie could not be released from the schools except on account of marriage were responsible for the hastening of her plans to marry, Mrs. Tombs stated yesterday.

"I was so anxious to accept the Los Angeles offer," Mrs. Tombs said, "because I should be much nearer to Mr. Tombs and because it offered me the grade of work I wished to teach. I had a grammar school position in Long Beach and this was for junior high school work. I did not think I should have any difficulty getting my release when I explained the situation, and I received some encouragement from one member of the Board of Education.

MARRIAGE OUTLET.

"Finally, however, I was told that marriage was my only means of release. I decided instantly that our marriage could be hastened. We were waiting for an improvement in Mr. Tombs's health before being married, but I convinced him that being married now was best for us both. We were married three days later and I began teaching the next day at Virgil Junior High School. I'm very glad I decided as I did."

The wedding took place at La Vina Sanatorium in Pasadena last Wednesday morning, in the presence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Frisbie of Long Beach, and her brother. Rev. Robert Freeman of Pasadena performed the ceremony.

The marriage is the culmination of a romance which started in Albuquerque, N. M., when Miss Frisbie was teaching there several years ago. They have been engaged for two years, and were to have been married a year ago, when Mr. Tombs's health broke down and the marriage was postponed.

AIDED SICK.

When John Tombs went from Montreal, Can., to Albuquerque, for his health, he became interested in social service and health questions in the State of New Mexico. When he had won back his own health he took up work to help other sick people. Largely through his efforts New Mexico gained her first State Department of Health, with Mr. Tombs as secretary. He started the Chamber of Commerce in Albuquerque and was secretary of it until he resigned in the interest of health work. He was regional secretary of the National Tuberculosis Association, in charge of California, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, and chairman of the social service committee of the International Rotary Clubs.

LOSES HEALTH.

During the influenza epidemic, Mr. Tombs was given charge of the fight for the State of New Mexico. As a result of his strenuous labors in behalf of other sick people, his own health again gave way, and he was forced last year to give up his many activities, and enter a sanatorium in Tucson, Ariz. Since coming to La Vina he has been engaged in writing for the journal of the Outdoor Life, the organ of the National Tuberculosis Association in New York.

"I think he will give that work up for a time," Mrs. Tombs said, "for now his first consideration is getting well."

Mrs. Tombs is a graduate of Grinnell College, Iowa. She taught for several years in Albuquerque. For the past year she has been a teacher at the Carrol Park school in Long Beach.

Seek Men for Air Units to Go to Hawaii.

Announcement was made yesterday by Lieut. John V. Hart, recruiting officer of March Field, Riverside, that recruiting of men is under way for the Twenty-third Squadron (bombardment) and the Nineteenth Squadron (pursuit.) These units are being organized for service in Hawaii.

Former soldiers discharged because of reduction of the Army, and soldiers discharged with character at least good, are eligible for reenlistment. There are also a few vacancies in the Quartermaster Corps and the Medical Department at March Field. These organizations will not accompany the Air Service organizations to Hawaii. It is anticipated that the two squadrons will leave for the islands about the first of the year.

AT MACARONI FEED.

Sons of America Feast will Be Given Tomorrow Night.

With a macaroni feed and social, Camp Bill Hart No. 4, Sons of America, will be the host tomorrow evening at Avenue 20 and Mozart street to ten committees representing every camp of the organization in the city. One hundred boy officers are expected to attend. A corps of Italian women, mothers of some of the lads, will prepare the food. There will be high jinks, pre-Halloween stunts and addresses on patriotism and good citizenship.

An entertainment will be given by the Sons of America on the night of the 29th inst. to the audience which attends the Woodcraft circus and rodeo at Hollywood Bowl. In November the organization will give a poultry show. There will also be a treasure hunt and a diving and swimming exhibition.

FORM BODY TO BATTLE PROFITEER.

Farmers Near Norwalk Get Together to Handle Own Products.

Demanding the elimination of the profiteer in handling farm products, twenty-five farmers in the vicinity of Norwalk have organized a Federal Farm Produce Association, which is intended to be expanded into a State-wide marketing organization.

A. D. Bradbeer, real estate dealer and property owner of Norwalk, is one of the principal organizers of the new association.

"Our organization is prepared to expose the dealings of the profiteers and speculators in California," Mr. Bradbeer said yesterday. "We are organizing to protect the interests of the producers and of the consumers. We will demand the elimination of the profiteer in handling, buying, selling or importing farm products, or in manipulating the markets.

"The new organization will take in all classes of producers of farm products and the marketing of all products will be handled through one central office, thus eliminating the expense of maintaining separate organizations for marketing each product, such as oranges, walnuts, sugar beets, etc.. The produce of members will be marketed direct to retail merchants."

"The Federal government has established a $1,000,000,000 fund to assist farmers in marketin products. So far, however, the speculators and profiteers, disguised as farmers, co-operatives, etc., have been the only ones to profit by the fund."

Goldwyn Studio Inspected by Chamber Body.

For the purpose of better understanding industries, the Manufacturing Committee of the Chamber of Commerce inspects manufacturing plants and on the occasion of its last business meeting was invited to look over the Goldwyn studios at Culver City.

Before the luncheon, members were conducted over the plant by Abraham Lehr, vice-president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and member of the Committee on Manufacturing. The function of various departments of scenario writing, costuming, designing and building were described in detail to the visitors inspecting the plant. It was the first trip to a studio for many of the important men on the Manufacturing Committee, who stated that, while they realized the motion-picture industry leads in Los Angeles they did not know the full meaning of the business to the city's interest until making the tour of inspection.

Members lunched in the studio cafeteria before holding a business meeting at which they outlined a plan to visit other important industrial plants of the city in the future.

SEARCHING THE RECORDS.

Anybody who ever had a drink with Roscoe Arbuckle will please communicate the circumstances to Dist.-Atty. Brady, who is here rounding up the fat comedian's thirst.

STILL ON GUARD.

Sawtelle may be without an official government, but there is nothing to worry about. There are several trained veterans at hand in case war breaks out or somebody fractures the speed limit.

NO SUCH THING.

A French statesman accuses the United States of insincerity. Possibly there are a few individuals who are insincere—men who want industrial prosperity and still vote the Democratic ticket, for instance—but in the main the nation is one of sincerity and candor. The Frenchman wots not of what he wots. Sincerity is our national trait.

THE WICKED MOONSHINER.

Government officials who trailed a West Virginia moonshiner found that he was a one-armed man. His wife was ill of pneumonia; her mother was laid up with a broken hip and his son was dying of consumption. He was making an occasional quart of contraband with the aid of a copper tea kettle. The detectives succeeded in breaking up the place and confiscating the kettle. The government must and shall be preserved.

THE HORRORS OF MONEY.

A respected citizen experiences some of the hardships of great wealth. When he was poor he could smoke a pipe and wear an old pair of slippers with no one to say him nay. But he inherited $100,000 and now the wife forces him to wear patent-leather shoes and smoke cigarettes. His feet are sore all the time and the cigarettes give him a nasty cough. He has complained to court about it. Wants the judge to take his money or his wife away. Doesn't care much which. Pity the poor rich man.

THE LADY JUROR.

Out of fifty persons summoned for jury service only fourteen were willing to qualify and of these ten were women. Maybe by another season we won't be able to get any but lady jurors. In a second panel of fifty names there were thirty-six women to start with. The dames who fought for generations for the right of jury service can now be accommodated to their heart's content. Instead of being tried by twelve men good and true the fate of the prisoner at the bar is now in the keeping of a dozen selected skirts—all good and some true.

FROM THE DARK AGES.

The idea of censorship is so thoroughly un-American that the bile of most red-blooded men spontaneously rises at the thought. To the doughboy the most unpleasant nuisance of the war was the censorship that prevailed over his private correspondence. It is not the result of the censorship that hurts, but the very thought of it. If there could be standards for censorship it might not be so objectionable, but as it lies today censorship is merely inflicting private opinion as the rule for public morals. A man who is willing to accept the judgment of another in buying a horse or voting for a candidate will fight like an Indian when somebody attempts to limit what he shall read or what picture he may see. There are plenty of laws and an ample police force for the suppression of a bad book or a naughty film and, therefore, any real warrant for a censorship is not readily apparent. No wonder that there is general protest at the suggestion. We want to be good, but we do not want any self-inflicted guardians of our morals and manners.

THE WIRELESS COP.

We may expect to have many more arrivals from the criminal colonies of the eastern cities if it becomes generally known that Los Angeles has but one patrolman for each five square miles of territory. That is virtually no policing at all. The department has to rely upon luck and chance for its results. The freight trains are said to be bringing a couple of hundred hobos to Southern California every day, so the prospects are strong for a busy season of misdemeanors and casual crimes. The city of Los Angeles undoubtedly has the smallest police force in proportion to population of any of the larger towns of America. Something will have to be done to make up this lack. Either the men will have to be made more efficient or else their equipment more deadly. If we cannot have a race of cops with seven-league boots and a thousand eyes something must take their place. In Chicago and a few other cities successful experiments have been made with wireless methods of police communication. In Chicago a police automobile equipped with wireless ran for ten miles through the mazes of the city with the driver in constant telephonic communication with the Chief, who was stationed in the tower of the City Hall. The automobile is directly or indirectly responsible for half of the crimes committed. It must be made more efficient in the work of correction and punishment. If police skirmishers can be kept in constant communication with headquarters by wireless telephone their availability will be immensely enlarged. They would be in position to instantly respond to any call and there would be little lost motion. With a wireless cop we could cope with some of these porch-climbers from the effete East.

THE OUTLOOK FOR MEXICO.

Mexico possesses a great constructive genius in President Obregon and her day of opportunity is at hand. I believe that every American owes it as a duty to his country and the world to do all he can in a co-operative, helpful way to aid our neighbor to the south of us to attain the place among the nations of the world that destiny intended her to occupy.

During the last ten years the people of Mexico have passed through a fiery furnace; but the country now has an opportunity to grow and prosper, to develop its resources and, through a process of education, to improve the material and social condition of its people.

But, to accomplish this, immigration must be encouraged and fostered by the enactment of just and liberal laws giving security to life and property and guaranteeing equality of opportunity to all within her borders. To pursue a narrow and selfish policy of "Mexico for the Mexicans" would be fatal to future prosperity.

If real popular government is to prevail there, Mexico must have an infusion of new blood, of new citizens who are ready and willing to work, who are intelligent and possess the rudiments of a modern education, sufficient to keep themselves informed as to national and world affairs.

Mexico now has the opportunity to take advantage of the fact that the United States is curtailing immigration. She can extend an invitation to the bone and sinew of Europe to make their homes there, to become citizens and develop her natural resources. If this policy is pursued, shutting out the vicious but making it easy for every man who is ambitious to secure a domicile in the Western Hemisphere to come, it will be the one great event that will mark the beginning of tremendous progress and development in Mexico.

An example is offered her by the success attained by this country when, by wise immigration laws, we invited the people of Scandinavia, Germany, France, Italy and Great Britain to occupy our vacant lands seventy years ago. If the United States had pursued a narrow and selfish policy of isolation when the republic was formed the vast domain west of the Allegheny Mountains would still be undeveloped.

One point that President Obregon made in our discussions during my recent visit to the Mexican capital impressed me greatly. He said that he had not pacified Mexico through force of arms, that, notwithstanding the fact that he had discharged and sent back to peaceful pursuits the major portion of the men who were formerly under arms, none of the dissatisfied elements, professional bandits included, had been able to secure a following sufficient to start at any point even an incipient revolution.

President Obregon did not rise to his present position through a happy accident, a caprice of fortune. It came to him because through all the period of the revolutions he proved himself worthy. During all the troubled years Obregon never failed in any emergency. In his connection with affairs of government he displayed a sound judgment, strong convictions and an indefatigable energy. He is well poised, thinks straight and is big enough and magnanimous enough to deal out justice to friend and foe alike. He believes in Mexico and the people of Mexico believe in him. Sustained by his own country and supported by the good will of the United States he should be able to accomplish much.

President Obregon is confronted by many and grave problems, similar to those which Washington was called upon to solve at the end of the Revolution and Lincoln during the Rebellion; but he is much more limited than were they in a very essential resource, an educated people schooled in the fundamentals of self-government. Only a comparatively small percentage of the people of the Mexican republic are educated, the balance being Indians who are generally illiterate.

Among the educated classes there are so many selfish interests that any man with less patriotism and less ability than President Obregon possesses would find the task of reconstruction insurmountable. His intense desire to serve his country, evidenced in all his actions, is an inspiration to all with whom he comes in contact. He pointed out to me that, during the whole thirty-day period of the recent Centennial celebration, not one untoward thing happened in the City of Mexico, where more than 400,000 visitors were entertained. There were no murders, no thieving, no fights, no serious quarrels; nothing but peaceful days and nights during the whole month of the celebration.

Such is Mexico under the Obregon administration. Is it any wonder President Obregon feels that, with twenty months of peace in Mexico since Carranza, the rest of the world should begin to have confidence in the stability of the present government? He contends that if the United States government officials really appreciated his difficulties, if they actually sensed the temperamental qualities of the Mexican people, they would perceive the necessity for co-operating with him in establishing a stable government, a government that will be just to its own citizens as well as to all foreigners who reside in Mexico.

Let recognition be given to the Obregon administration by the governments of the other nations, and the financial support which foreign capital will then be justified in extending, and we shall soon see the greatest era of constructive development and general prosperity in Mexico that has ever been known there. The country is rich in natural resources and the people are tired of revolution and the destruction of property. They crave peace, quiet and an opportunity to earn and to restore their lost possessions. The Bolshevik element is not more numerous in Mexico than in the United States and perhaps in other civilized nations of the world. They have had a practical example of what Bolshevism means and the people want no more of it.

FLYING SERVICE.

Nearly 10,000 airships are said to be ready for service in carrying mail and handling emergency rations or food supplies in the event of a general railway strike. There would really be no emergency in any section of the country that could not be relieved in this way if given a little time.

PRACTICING THE GOSPEL.

The fact that a police official banks $100,000 out of his salary in three years shows that he has been reading the government lessons on thrift. He is almost as frugal as some of our well-known labor-union leaders.

THE LOS ANGELES SALON.

Those who are still skeptical about the artistic and cultural development of Los Angeles keeping pace with our increase in population and progress in industry should visit this week the Los Angeles salon. Many among us, perhaps a majority, are probably unaware that such an institution exists. This term is applied to the annual exhibitions of painting and sculpture held by the California Art Club in the main gallery of the Los Angeles Museum at Exposition Park.

Southern California is the promised land of the landscape painters and the local art colony comprises some of the most renowned landscapists in America. They have migrated here from the shores of the seven seas and they live in a land of enchantment from which, for them, there is no escape. They say that the golden sun dust is more luminous here than anywhere else on earth. But painters, like prophets, seem to find little honor and less homage in their own communities. Not one canvas in twenty painted here remains in Southern California. They are sent to New York, London and Paris, where they find a ready market. Meanwhile at least half a million dollars of Los Angeles money is sent to the East and to Europe annually for the purchase of art treasures.

In the present exhibition are canvases that time will render famous; for America is rapidly becoming noted as the home of the greatest living colorists. Their canvases awake the admiration of European art connoisseurs. The French government has just purchased its fifth masterpiece from an American painter, Harry Lachman. They are all landscapes; and it will be informative to those who have still but a scant admiration for American art to know that the French government owns more canvases by Mr. Lachman than by any other foreign artists, even by the masters of the Renaissance period. Its latest acquisition, "The Valley of Grand Anley," was offered by its author last year to the Carnegie Gallery at Pittsburg and was declined by the jury.

Instances might be multiplied in which masterpieces by American artists, after rejection in their own country, were purchased by foreign governments and now evoke universal admiration. Whistler's masterpiece, a portrait of his mother, went begging in America; and the Boston Library turned down Macmonnies' justly famous "Bacchante." Prudishness caused the rejection of the "Bacchante," but it offers no excuse for the lack of appreciation of Lachman's work; for he paints only landscapes.

Artists are aware that a similar lack of appreciation of home talent exists in Southern California. The average purchaser of oil paintings imagines that a canvas, to be a masterpiece, must picture a foreign scene and be the work of an alien artist. It is high time that we of Los Angeles should open our eyes to the pearls of art scattered about our feet.

Competent judges who are familiar with the London and Paris annual exhibits assert that the present collection of landscape canvases on display in the Los Angeles salon is the finest ever assembled for a similar exhibition in any country. There are scenes from the High Sierras, Yosemite, the Grand Canyon, the desert, the canyons and foothills about Los Angeles, the southern beaches, private gardens and public parks. Every canvas possesses merit and conveys a message, for a jury passed upon each picture before it was accepted.

But it is not for its landscapes alone that this year's salon is notable. There are a score of genre paintings that depict scenes in the every-day life of the people. Where the average person sees only the commonplace the inspired vision of the artist senses rhythm and beauty. The portrait painters are creators of costumes as well as delineators of character. If milady would know the most becoming styles for blond hair or brown, would learn the draping that sets off a figure, either slender or slightly obese, to the best advantage she will find these problems solved in the portraits that adorn the walls of the gallery. It is the portrait painters of Paris who set for a generation the styles for women. Los Angeles is now dictating the styles for the women of America and these portraitists are creating the styles for Los Angeles. Los Angeles sculptors also have their part in the exhibition, although they are not so numerous nor so prolific as the colorists. They are hampered by the lack of marble; but a vein of wonderful white marble is reported to have been discovered in the Imperial Valley country. If this proves to be true the sculptors are destined to become as famous as our landscapists.

At the present time our artists are compelled to wander like waifs from domicile to domicile. They have no collective home in Los Angeles. One suggestion which has come from the present exhibition is that a movement be inaugurated to construct a clubroom and exhibition gallery for the California Art Club. If a permanent place of exhibit for the productions of Southern California artists were secured here it would at once become one of the show places of the city, as popular as are the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce. We owe it to the artists, who are educators as well, to give them more cordial recognition, for in honoring them we shall be honoring ourselves.

LOVE WILL FIND A WAY.

One of our esteemed lady assistant Attorney-Generals of the United States plaintively inquires whether anybody ever heard of a man proposing marriage to a girl over a steam radiator? She declares that the cutting out of the big open fireplace in the modern home has reduced Hymen's chances 1000 per cent. She says, next to a moonlight night, an open fireplace is the greatest known inspiration to love and matrimony. Set a man and a maid before a blazing hearth and the business of love-making will be speeded up wonderfully. But the lady jurist need not worry. Folks are still marrying in the steam radiator belt. The radiator is not particularly chummy or hospitable in appearance, yet young people may grow quite susceptible to the tender passion within its amiable environment. Stenographers in the office buildings in northern cities might be able to furnish some information on that score. The marriage ratio is very high in this class. Whether Adam had an open fireplace, a steam radiator or a moonlight night, the love-making went on just the same.

EDUCATION AND LUXURIES.

One of the first men to tender his resignation to Mr. Harding was Philander P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education since 1911.

During these years of public service Mr. Claxton has greatly advanced the cause of the public schools of the United States and has endeared himself to all public-school people by his personal interest and resourcefulness. No one worked harder than he to prevent a lowering of educational standards in the United States during the World War. In fact, he took advantage of the times to impress upon the public the fact that this great national school system had long been suffering from the accumulated neglect and the unquestioned use of accrued customs with which it had been surrounded and that now new and higher standards are needed. Mr. Claxton took steps to elevate the teaching standards, to reorganize the system as to administration and to create the new and more generous financial support needed for the ever-growing public-school system of the United States.

Mr. Claxton called a national educational convention and regional conventions and the representatives at his request were of three types: government officials, school people and business men. This was the first time in our history that the public-school system had ever been viewed from the three angles—government, school and business.

"School Life," published by the Bureau of Education, reached nearly every school and city library. In it were printed the experiences and methods of teachers all over the United States in getting the public-school situation squarely before the citizens of their communities.

Facts and figures which were awakening and even startling were compiled under Mr. Claxton's supervision. The people were given a chance thereby to view our great public-school system in its entirety. They were told that the United States had 20,853,516 children in its rural and city schools, 600,000 teachers were teaching in these schools, $1,000,000,000 was required per year to finance this large educational system. That each year more pupils, more teachers and more dollars would necessarily enter this great system.

A second big view of the public-school system of the United States was given by Mr. Claxton to combat the prevalent idea that the burden of taxation was due to our public schools. Figures were compiled for 1920, which showed that the people of the United States spent $22,700,000,000 for luxuries and a little over $1,000,000,000 for education—twenty times as much for luxuries as for schools. More was spent for luxuries in 1920 than has been spent in America for education in all the 300 years there have been schools on this continent.

In 1918 a total of $919,729,258 was spent for education in the United States.

For the fifty years previous to 1918 about $14,552,796,037 was expended.

For the years preceding 1870 it is estimated $2,153,000,000 was spent.

Or a grand total for the 300 years of $16,645,000,000. Compare this figure with the $22,700,000,000 spent in the United States for luxuries in the year 1920.

What the luxuries were—year 1920—(partial list:)

Face powder and perfumes....	$750,000,000
Furs	300,000,000
Soft drinks	350,000,000
Toilet soaps	400,000,000
Cigarettes	800,000,000
Cigars	510,000,000
Tobacco and snuff	800,000,000
Jewelry	500,000,000
Chewing gum	50,000,000

In addition to these facts about numbers and finance, Mr. Claxton pointed out to the people the educational inequalities of the different States and made constructive suggestions as to how they could be remedied.

Public-school people have had the feeling that there was in Washington a great mind alert for their interests and the interests of the public-school children.

On May 12, 1921, President Harding appointed Mr. John James Tigert of Lexington, Ky., United States Commissioner of Education in place of Mr. Claxton. Mr. Tigert took the oath of office on June 1 and began his duties on June 2. "Who's Who in America" (1921) says of Mr. Tigert: a college professor, born at Nashville, Tenn., 1882. B.A. degree from Vanderbilt University, 1904; B.A. in Honor School of Jurisprudence, Oxford University, England, 1907 (Cecil Rhodes Scholarship, M.A., 1915, professor of philosophy and psychology in several southern colleges and in the University of Kentucky, 1917; member Phi Beta Kappa; author of "The Philosophy of the World War;" lecturer and entertainer; contributor to London Quarterly Review.

With such a background of preparation we shall likely find Mr. Tigert, our new Commissioner of Education, to be a man of vision. Let us co-operate with him in making the public-school system of the United States the most efficient and ever-progressive in the world.

RIPPLING RHYMES.

ROSES AND ROCKS.

Our idol stands before us and does some merry tricks, and we applaud in chorus this prince of joyous hicks. We watch his every antic, we laugh until we weep, our glee is almost frantic, our admiration deep. We say, "Oh, was there ever so comical a gent? A guy so wondrous clever at spreading merriment? We certainly adore him, he gladdens all our days, and if it wouldn't bore him our college yell we'd raise." But, lo, he pulled a blunder—perhaps it was a crime—and now we're trampling under the chap we called sublime. We have no thought of mercy as we apply the gaff to that form, fat and pursy, at which we used to laugh. In highly moral dudgeon we knock him from his feet and call for ax and bludgeon to make the job complete. No doubt we've done some evil, we truly moral guys; our record's full of weevil we do not advertise. Oh, poor old human nature, it always is the same; no court or legislature can change its foolish game. We worship some one madly until he makes a break, then, morally and sadly, we burn him at the stake. The more we used to love him when he was in his bloom, the fiercer do we shove him and kick him to his doom.

WALT MASON.

METROPOLITAN LIFE.

Tailors are complaining because they can get no young men to work on their benches. Few journeymen under 60 are to be found in New York shops.

"Do these cars stop at the Battery?" a stranger asked at Forty-second street. "If they don't you'll get an awful ducking," was the answer he got.

Black-draped, a gun caisson drawn by four horses, astride two of which were artillerymen, lumbered through the crowded streets of Brooklyn almost unnoticed. Only a doughboy "home at last" from overseas.

Boulders excavated from the site are being used exclusively in the foundations of a big apartment-house up on Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn. The cost of day labor to break them up is less than that for masonry stone.

In Battery Park a man earns many dimes on hot days by sheltering persons from the sun under a large umbrella as they wait for excursion steamers.

A young woman sat in an open Broadway car with one foot poised carelessly over the running board. Suddenly the car lurched and a little pump dropped to the street. There was a feminine scream; the conductor stopped the car and, descending to the street, she stood chickenwise on one foot till an obliging young man came up with the missing pump.

Old couple, 89 and 90 respectively, just got married. Telling the secret of happy marriages to the young and inexperienced. The lady has explained that William has twenty-four great-grandchildren, twenty-three grandchildren and six children and that she herself has a slightly smaller but similar array. "So we have had experience enough to know where the dangers and the joys of matrimony are to be found and that's the key to domestic bliss." The gentleman explains that he has known Edith for sixty years and it is very important to know the lady well before taking so important a step as matrimony.

All of which sounds reasonable, but a trifle discouraging to the young. This acquisition of grandchildren and great-grandchildren offers certain complications and interim activities and experiments that could and might prove a trifle exacting. However, in the cause of such unalloyed romance one should never weaken. All the same, we shall like to hear from William and Edith again, after this their supreme grande passion has settled into its stride. We have observed that so many of these reckless lovers lay down these rules for our guidance in the first flush of their latest romance rather than at "the end of a perfect day." We shall not feel really confident about it until Elinor Glyn has given us another gem of emotional literature entitled "The Passionate Centenarians."

A young woman is suing a local theater and actor because the latter insisted upon including her in his act. Came down from the stage and forcibly imprinted a kiss on the lady's cheek, while she was a trusting, innocent member of the audience.

This sort of thing is getting a bit too prevalent. A frisky young woman in a recent musical comedy came among the audience and powdered the noses of unsuspecting young men to their intense embarrassment. If the audience has to be part of the show they ought to be let in on the profits. In any case, this assumption of liberties from the stage is dashed impertinence. If I want my nose powdered I'll get my own girl to do it, thank you. And if my girl wants to be kissed I'm right there without any busy little actor butting in.

Your Lancer has just experienced a mighty triumph. I have still got my appendix. Like the sainted Elinor, I am a bit of a sybarite myself and insist upon having exquisite, precious things about me. So when they had me hors de combat and thought I was a poor, helpless thing whose appendix they could swipe forthwith—and, by jimminy, it looked like a narrow shave—I defied 'em. They could take my tea and coffee, my cigarettes, my solid sustenance and even my daily paper and my pants, but when it came to taking my appendix I struck. I have it on the best authority that an appendix is a superfluous luxury—and it is the only superfluous luxury I have. And I'll bet it is an extra special, A1, extra-fancy appendix—and its mine, mine, mine. They didn't get it and they are not going to. Leave me my luxuries and you can take your old necessities.

Germans, we are told, are trying to discredit American films by running a Chaplin comedy in conjunction with a German version of the life of Christ. Says the critic-snooper, "The biblical film was unpsychological, undramatic and intensely tiresome, whereas the Chaplin film, which convulsed the audience, was voted fine."

Which impresses me as a very German method of "discrediting" American films—and rather a far-fetched, logical conclusion for the critic to arrive at. It looks more like poor taste than malice to me.

A chap is offering me a neat device by which I can use my old safety razors to sharpen my pencils, cut my corns, nip my cigars and all sorts of things. I have been hording 'em for years in the hope that some bright Hooverist would intervene between them and the scrap pile. I foresee a happy vista in economy whereby I can carve the chicken with them in time. Just so long as you can't remove appendixes with them I'm for them. But if my doctor has one he is no friend of mine.

Lord Leverhulme is disputing the charge for his portrait by Sir William Orpen because he ordered a full-length affair and Sir William only reproduced half of him. His Lordship accordingly wants to pay only half price. But, then, we haven't seen His Lordship's legs and Sir William may have been actuated strictly in the cause of art. If Sir William got his appendix in the portrait Lord Leverhulme should pay up and smile like a perfect complete gentleman. But if that half a portrait left that out—sic him, My Lord, don't pay the piker a cent!

Jack Dempsey, defendant in a love-stealing suit, in which the vaudeville-wife's affections are estimated as worth $100,000 by the wrathful husband, is not quite as gallant as we should like the perfect male to be. His defense is to depreciate the value of the goods. Says the kind of girl he wants "must be an honest-to-goodness girl with bloom in her cheeks" and that the alleged stolen property doesn't answer this description.

Never mind about the bloom, Jack. She can buy that at a drug store. But you watch out and see that no one has annexed her appendix. You can't buy those and just pin them on. And life without an appendix—ugh!

SALON OF LOS ANGELES PROVES TREASURE TROVE.

Works of Southland Artists, on View in Park Museum Gallery, Reveal Familiar Scenes Transmuted.

sess the essence of radium. Electrical instruments have been invented that measure and register the vibrations of the different pigments. Red registers a low vibration, green and violet the most intense. Color also possesses tone, and it is only stating a scientific fact when one asserts that a certain picture gives the same impression as listening to a symphony. From the vibrating colors music emanates and at times our subconscious self catches a key that the drum of the ear is too coarsely constructed to register.

I relate these things in order that you may have an appreciation that in looking at an oil painting you are taking part in one of the most wonderful and mysterious manifestation of all nature. The love of the beautiful is innate. If the divine spark is not within you, the color radiations will leave you cold and unappreciative. Every true artist is an Aeolian harp; but, through a defect of nature, some persons are born tone deaf. Fortunately, they are much fewer in number than is generally supposed.

It is by reason of its tonal quality that color under the brush of a master possesses all the harmony of inspired music. A mysterious relation exists between poetry, music and sculpture. David Edstrom, to illustrate, is a poet who writes in marble. The painter of one of the landscapes that I so much admire in the exhibition is an equally talented musical composer.

Some artists paint in low moral tones, regardless of their color selection, and their canvases fill me with the same disgust as ribald music. There are landscapes that are vulgar and nudes that are anthems. Nudity is the product of divine inspiration. The first clothes were made by the first sinners.

EDEN IN HOLLYWOOD.

In the present exhibition, however, there is but a single canvas portraying beauty unadorned. It is Edouard Veskal's "Garden of Eden." Here the artist has taken great liberties witth the biblical legend, for he has located the Garden of Eden in Hollywood, and the houses and cathedral wall in the background are of strictly modern construction. One also suspects that the models are members of the movie colony.

Such an interpretation of the beginning of the race is distinctly shocking to the puritans, and I suspect the artist intended it to be so. One would like to condemn this canvas for its assault on tradition; but the composition is so meritorious that it compels admiration. You testify against your will to the talent of the painter, however much you might desire to draw him into an ethical discussion.

Eve stands leaning against a rail fence under the shade of a tree whose fruit and branches suggest plums rather than apples, gazing into the residence district in the background. Adam stands beside her, an arm thrown negligently about her shoulder. The drawing is of great purity and there is not even a suggestion of the sensuous.

Green tones predominate and the flowers and foliage of the garden are painted in a masterly, although ultra-modern, style. There is a piquancy about the canvas that attracts. It carries a challenge to the puritans that they will be wise not to accept.

AMID PURPLE SHADOWS.

Orrin S. White has achieved the rare feat of so blending sunlight and purple shadow as to make of a straggling group of eucalyptus trees a thing of color and beauty. There is no idealization in the drawing. The trees are presented in their twisted deformity. They lack the symmetry of the spruce and pine and the graceful umbrella spread of the live oak, but they reflect in their polished leaves all the colors of the sunset, and he has painted them so.

His landscape glows with warmth and color. The branches of the eucalypti droop slightly in the perfect stillness of the summer afternoon when the sun beats down upon them, giving a copper tinge to the foliage and burning to a dull brown and red the slope at their feet that was as colorful as a Persian carpet in the springtime.

Fleecy clouds float like great white birds above the foothills in the distance against a sky of a blue so intense that those who have never seen the summer skies of the Southland would deem it a fault, or an idealization. One senses a storm in the mountains whence they have strayed.

In this composition there is native genius, an art that is not borrowed from faded canvases hanging in the Louvre or the Pitti Palace. Orrin White is a California painter. He has lived the life in the open and has taken his colors direct from the landscape and sky. His freedom of action has not been enslaved by spending years of servile coyping in a foreign studio under stranger skies. Nature was his only master and his interpretation of one of her characteristic moods deserves the award he received for the best landscape in the exhibition.

He has won no scholarships, holds no diploma from any school of art; but his canvas recalls the maxim, "Good wine needs no bush."

Would he paint better if he had spent a term of years in Paris or Rome? That is a question which I leave for those who love to engage in abstract speculation to answer. But he won the blue ribbon over the heads of men of talent and mature years who have done so. Some may condemn his technique as unconventional; but their strictures flatten against his triumphant canvas like leaden bullets against a rock.

As to the possibilities for his future, that, too, is a matter of conjecture. He has reached a flowered summit; but beyond looms a towering mountain range whose peaks are whitened by the eternal snows.

THE HIGH SIERRAS.

Edgar Payne's "Rugged Slopes and Tamaracks" carries us on the back of his hippogrif to a lakeside among the crags at the summit of the high Sierras. We are well above the line where grow the fir and spruce. A few straggling tamaracks cling to the rim of a mountain pool whose intensely blue waters disclose its great depth. Snow lies drifted and caked on the northern slopes, between the rocks, whose copper cast tells us that the artist has himself climbed with blankets slung across his shoulders up the perilous gravelly slopes of the Minarets, at the headwaters of the San Joaquin.

For the crags of the California Sierras are of a different color from those of the Rockies, by reason of the presence of vast quantities of iron ore. One of the minarets is a solid ledge of iron ore 14,000 feet high.

As I look at this canvas I envision him struggling upward, scorched by the sun at noonday and chilled by the frosts of the early morning, but steadily approaching his ideal, the summit of the mountain. His chafed feet are bleeding and his brain reels, but he perseveres, for he is a true artist. Finally he scales the topmost ledges, stands in solitary triumph in the great alone, higher than the eagle's nest or vultures soar; above the lightnings that shiver a giant pine in a canyon far below.

There, and there alone could he find the blending of light and shade, the cloud effects and the transparency of certain colors in so rarified an atmosphere with which he has produced what is perhaps the strongest, most vigorous study of the California high Sierras ever painted.

FROM THE SUMMIT.

Others have stood at their base and sketched them towering in their majesty. He is one of the hardy few who have reached the summit. The pearl-grey and opal tints that he blends so admirably are themselves a trumph of the painter's art. Few artists have given to colors that suggest fragility such strength and dignity. That canvas is worthy a place in any salon in any country. If a French artist were to bring back such a one from the Pyrenees, it would be purchased by his government and given a permanent place in the Louvre. This one will probably be bought by an eastern art dealer and lost forever to Southern California, where it should remain.

What a contrast between this cold and rigid mountain landscape and Ernest Browning Smith's "Mother Mountains at Sunset!" Here the artist stands in the burning sands of the red desert and gazes at the stark brown mountains that dominate the skyline; their peaks incarnadined by the sunset and their slopes shrouded in a blue haze, intensified by contrast with the red summits.

He looks up at the inflexible barrier like a child getting an incipient vision of the stern realities of life, the soul torn in anguish by its first sorrow. The desert, at once seducing and forbidding, is maroon in the twilight. Few painters have made the burning desolation more realistic. It symbolizes the lure that, despite its horrors, draws intrepid spirits into a fastness that many enter, but from which few return. There is gold in those canyons, but death in the seeking, and most of those who escape leave the best of themselves behind.

DESERT WAIFS.

I have stood bathed in that blue and purple haze at twilight, and I have panted with swollen tongue through those blistering sands at noonday, and I know what this canvas means. To me it is not a picture of the southern desert at nightfall, but the desert itself.

Hanging beside this canvas and its complement—and I congratulate the committee on its dramatic "flair"—is one by Clyde Forsythe, "Wanderers of the Desert." A prospector, gaunt and burned to a brick red by wind and sun, stoops beside his jaded pack horse to offerin a tin cup a swallow of water—on the desert more precious than gold—to his dejected companion, a mongrel cur.

All three are without class or pedigree. The horse is a mixed breed, the dog an accident of mating, the man a remnant cast off by society, trying to come back by striking it rich. Companions in misery and familiar figures on the great desert. The dog is nearest collapse. His back is slightly arched, the hind legs sag at hip and knee and the tail droops. The horse, from which the bridle has been removed, is browsing amidst the leafless branches of the stunted desert growth. In the background a lone cactus stands, stretching forth its spiny arms like a sentinel guarding the entrance to an inferno.

Pale blue and ivory predominate in the color scheme, giving to the whole a pallid, uncanny effect. Nothing but the endless desert, not a mountain looms on the horizon with its promise of shade and water. One feels that the mist will soon rise and burning sun will blind them by its merciless heat. Let us hurry away, lest we be compelled to witness a desert tragedy; for the mirage will soon dance in the distance and one feels that vultures are soaring high above, hidden by the mist. Only those who have trudged through its sands know how pitiless the desert can be in its sullen moods.

THE ORANGE LADY.

Clarence Hinkle's canvas, "The Portrait," awakens the admiration of the modernists and shocks the devotees of the old masters. It is a study in sunlight and the objects are seen through a golden haze of sun dust. It is a painting of a woman sitting on a boulder at the entrance of the canyon. At first glance the composition recalled to me Da Vinci's "Mona Lisa;" (La Gioconda;) but the treatment of the subject and the color effects are wholly dissimilar to that of the great Florentine masterpiece.

The warm flesh tints of the face, throat and hands are sacrificed to the chiaroscuro or gradations of light. It is the sun that dominates the picture, a sun of July that browns and reddens, and one wonders how the woman can keep her eyes open in so blinding a glare, which strikes her full in the face. But perhaps I get a more vivid impression of sunlight than the artist intended. I may have taken the orange tone too literally.

The pose of the sitter is pensive, too tense for relaxation. It suggests a woman of 30 whose mind is active. She seems to be solving some interior problem, not with the serene eyes and slightly mocking lips of Mona Lisa, but in a spirit of resignation, possibly asking herself why it was her fate to marry an artist; for I am told that the portrait is that of Mrs. Hinkle, wife of the painter.

I was surprised that the face was not more expressive of youth. Perhaps it is the effect of the blinding light of the sun that hardens the flesh and gives the impression of maturity. Happy the husband who can find in his wife so charming a model. But in one who can ruthlessly sacrifice her beauty to brilliance of light, the artist dominates the lover. The treatment of the subject is a good example of impressionist painting. The features are simply sketched in outline, leaving the flesh tints to the imagination of the spectator.

A BUYER'S DILEMMA.

I was vastly amused at the comment of one observer: "I should like to own that canvas; but I should hesitate to approach even a painter with a proposition to buy his wife."

I heard one woman say, "If I were his wife and he painted me like that I would begin action for divorce."

Many condemn the picture for its lack of beauty. But Mr. Hinkle will probably reply that he is not a painter of chromos. The high award which it won renders all praise of the canvas as an artistic conception superfluous. I would simply remind those who deride how useless it is to try to knock a winner.

One's opinion of the picture will depend very largely on the amount of tradition he carries with him to the gallery. If he is enamoured of Turner and Reynolds or of Murillo and Raphael he will condemn the absence of flesh tints and shadow. He will cry out against the blinding light that dazzles by its splendor.

But his criticism will apply equally to all the productions of the impressionist and modernist masters. A discussion of the respective merits of the old and new schools would be futile; for all the artists who have sent canvases to the present exhibit have cut loose from tradition, burning their bridges behind them. They are looking forward, not backward. They discard the effect of shifting screens and modulated light of the studio and paint in the open.

DAY DREAMS.

Donna Schuster's "Little Mother" is another prize winner about which a storm of controversy rages. It is praised or condemned, according to the preconceived opinion of the observer, regarding styles of painting. Miss Schuster, like Mr. Hinkle, sacrifices detail to brilliance of color.

In the path of a summer garden, surrounded by red flowers and partly shaded by green foliage, a little girl of probably 8 years sits in a rocking chair holding in loving caress three dolls. Her head is tilted slightly forward and her eyelids droop, as though she has fallen to sleep in the sunlight, which falls from behind in splashes of yellow through the trees.

Her flaxen hair falls loosely about her shoulders, but the greatest charm of the canvas is the suggestion of a smile that plays about her lips and dimples her cheeks, as though fairies were whispering to her in her slumber. The suggestion of placid content reveals a woman's intuition of motherhood, and gives me the impression that the artist would win renown as a painter of Madonnas. It possesses a delicacy that a masculine brush could never achieve.

That vision of childhood will remain with me when all the other canvases have vanished from my memory, for it conveyed an imperishable message. The years will pass and the model will ripen into womanhood. Her illusions will fail, like the petals of a blown rose. She will learn to love and hate and suffer; for such is the lot of woman. But, until the colors shall fade with age and disappear, a work of centuries, the little mother painted there will continue in her rapturous slumber. As I looked at that canvas I seemed to glimpse as through a violet haze the soul of the artist in all its virgin purity, and I felt ennobled by the contact. When I hear Puritans protest that a woman has no place in an artist's studio, the vision of that "Little Mother" will rise to confute them.

FROM MOUNTAIN TOPS.

Another canvas that ennobles while it pleases and shows California artists at their best is Benjamin C. Brown's "The Kearsarge Pinnacles," a canvas that he brought back with him last year from the summit of the High Sierras; for he, too, is a painter of the mountain tops.

Here are vermilion crags with the snows of winter still banked in the crevices and canyons, and a mountain lake whose waters are an intense blue, an indigo more glorious than purple. A slight vapor rises from the snow, tortured by the sunlight, giving it a pale blue transparency that beginners will strive vainly to imitate; for Mr. Brown is a master of technique and the canvas impresses me with its purity and grandeur, like a Beethoven symphony.

Below the signature is written the single word "California," and thereby hangs a legend. Mr. Brown is one of the early Southern California masters. When he sent his first canvases East they received but scant attention from the Pharisees, who refused to believe that a masterpiece could originate outside the great art centers. An art dealer suggested to him that he should open a studio in New York, in order to remove the curse from his work.

He indignantly refused and, nailing his colors to the mast, he painted thereafter in red letters under his signature to every canvas the word "California." By doing so his "arrival" was deferred probably ten years. But his courage and genius triumphed over eastern prejudice and his landscapes are now among the most highly prized treasures of these same Pharisees.

His signal success brought scores of artists to view the scene his brush had rendered famous, and gave the first impulse to establish an art colony in Los Angeles. Believing as I do that the public of Los Angeles will not be unappreciative of those who have been the pioneers in our cultural development, I hope to see a marble bust of Benjamin C. Brown from the chisel of a local sculptor, adorn a pedestal in the Los Angeles Museum as a tribute for notable service rendered to his city. It is in honoring such as he that we do honor to ourselves.

NORTHERN CLIMES.

Jack W. Smith, president of the California Art Club, spent the summer sketching along the northern coasts and his contributions to the exhibit are a landscape and a seascape whose cold tones offer an interesting contrast to the warmer landscapes of Southern California out-of-doors. "Oregon's Grey Coast" portrays a bleak headland where one feels the cutting winds that sweep southward from the Arctic Circle. The fog fairly makes one shiver and the green tides are painted in a chilling tone that suggests floating ice. The rocks are grey, cold and forbidding. The charm of this canvas is that the atmosphere is painted as well as the shore, sea and sky.

It is a bit of coast that one might stop to admire if clothed in furs, but where one would not care to linger. In the foreground a woman sits huddled on a rock. Beside her are two baskets, mute evidence that she has been wading in the surf for crabs of clams. This human touch adds to the sense of cold and isolation. How great is the contrast between this scene and the warm bathing beaches of Southern California, where it is a pleasure to loiter, that invite companionship!

His companion picture, "Sand Dunes and Cypress," is one of the canvases most admired by artists in the collection. Its technique is almost faultless, but the scene is too cold and forbidding to awaken my admiration. He secures, however, the effect he intends. My attitude is that of those who used to hiss the villain in the melodramas because, through excellent acting, he rendered the part so villainous.

Here, too, the landscape is seen through a chilling atmosphere. In the foreground is a stretch of white sand bordered by a hedge of dull green cypress in which brown tones predominate. The dead pallor of the evergreen conveys the damp effect of things long dead. Behind the cypress is a row of foothills almost hidden under descending fog. The atmospheric effect secured by a lavish use of deep green and indigo gives an effect of desolation and grandeur. A woman, bent with age and a burden of faggots, plods across the edge of the waste. Her skirts are blowing in the wind, whose icy touch chills even the spectator. These canvases have the effect which the Greeks and Romans sought to attain by seating a skeleton at every feast. They serve as a background to throw into greater relief more pleasing southern landscapes.

MOONLIGHT AND SEA.

"Moonlight at Laguna Beach" and "The Sea," by Guy Rose, are studies of faultless technique and rare charm. In the moonlight scene the fury of the tide is spent and the waves lap gently the narrow beach and caress languidly the jutting rocks. A sheen of white moonlight, with just a trace of pearl, forms a luminous path across the swaying tides, widening as it disappears in the horizon. Blue, green, indigo and brown tints enhance by contrast the purity of the rays. It is neither a red harvest moon nor the silvery moon of which the poets sing. It suggests rather the whiteness of the lily. Nowhere is there even the suggestion of the gradations of red or yellow. The absence of these violent colors gives to the canvas a somnolent repose. I have seldom looked upon a more restful scene.

What a lure for lovers! The very murmur of the waves kissing the sands and pebbles suggests caresses. The light and shadow are so delicately blended as to give to the waves a swaying motion, as though they were rocked in a giant's cradle. The canvas is an excellent tonic for weary eyes and frayed nerves. What silence and repose! As I stood before it I found myself unconsciously repeating Moore's "Oft' in the Stilly Night."

Its companion, "The Sea," shows the tides in full motion. There they resent the resistance of the rocky barrier and dash against the stones with the fury of a demon. The spray is thrown high in the air. What a wonderful shower bath if one might stand beneath! For painting the sea in its varying moods Guy Rose is a master. I have been told that he has suffered a third shock of paralysis and that these canvases may be the last to issue from his brush. But I refuse to believe that destiny is so cruel. Nature, I am sure, will be more kind to one who understands so well her restless and slumbering moods.

THE PORTRAIT PAINTERS.

Most popular of all the portraits in the gallery, possibly because the sitter is best known, is that of Dr. George F. Boyard, president emeritus of the University of Southern California, by John Rich, in dean's gown with a broad purple collar that falls over his shoulders. He sits in an arm chair in an alert pose, the fingers of one hand caressing the point of his chin. His attitude is that of an arbiter, to whom some one is making an argument or an explanation, possibly about an infraction of discipline; for the mood is one that is critical rather than complaisant.

As a study in expression this portrait possesses unquestioned merit. A high light strikes the figure full in the face, giving prominence and nobility to each essential feature. The rest of the canvases is painted in a low key, and the contrast of subdued tones adds to the intensity of the direct gaze of those searching steel-blue eyes. They rivet your attention, as though they were exposing to the light some hidden delinquency in your own heart. There is no escaping them.

I looked in vain for some open window with a garden beyond or for some shelf of books to which the eye might wander for relief, fleeing that accusing stare. None of these conventional accessories is present. The background is a single broad panel of blue tinged with violet, and the shade is so deep and regular that I could not determine whether it was a wall or a drop curtain. I have seen Dr. Bovard on the lecture platform, but I got a deeper insight into his character from looking at that portrait than from personal contact. Can a higher compliment be paid to a portrait painter?

As I passed about the gallery I

Why You Need IRON

NUXATED IRON

Get Back Your Grip on Health
TAKE NUXATED IRON
For Red Blood, Strength and Endurance

TO make you Strong and "brainy" and put the power into your blood to overcome disease germs.

Practical advice on how to develop great energy and endurance

The food you eat contains carbon. When your food is digested it is absorbed from the intestines into the blood. When the carbon in your food comes in contact with the oxygen carried by the iron in your blood, the carbon and oxygen unite, and by so doing they give off tremendous energy, thereby giving you great force, strength and endurance. Without iron your blood carries no oxygen and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food, so that what you eat does you no good—you do not get any strength from it—it is like putting coal into a stove without a fire. You cannot get any heat unless the coal unites with the fire.

The strongest weapon with which to prevent and overcome colds, pneumonia, kidney trouble, rheumatism, nervous prostration, in fact, almost any disease or disease germs, is plenty of good, rich, pure blood, strength, energy and endurance, and the greatest energy carrier in the body is organic iron, not metallic iron which people usually take, but organic iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron contained in what is known as organic Nuxated Iron, which may be had from almost any druggist.

If you have been taking metallic iron without benefit, such is no proof that organic Nuxated Iron will not help you. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength, energy and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time. It is such an extremely valuable product that even the Pope at Rome wrote especially of its merits in a communication to the Pharmacie Normale. It has been used and highly recommended by former United States Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U.S. Courts, physicians and prominent men.

Over 4,000,000 people are now using it annually. Satisfactory results are guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Nuxated Iron comes in tablets only—never in liquid form. Sold by all druggists.

READY FOR CROSS CALL.

Campaign to Begin on Armistice Day.

Announces Plans to Speed Up Work.

Angelenos Are on Drive Committee.

Burton L. Knisely, managing editor of the Record.

TO TELL ACTIVITIES.

One of the interesting pieces of information which will be published and sent broadcast in the mails of a large number of business firms will be a statement of the way the money collected in last year's roll call in Los Angeles was expended. The audit of these figures has just been completed by the War Department, and will be published within the next few days.

"Every effort will be made to conduct this roll call as speedily and efficiently as possible," Chairman Ryan announced yesterday. "We want to make Los Angeles a 'white spot' in this great field of humanitarian service just as it has been the one 'white spot' on the American commercial map."

Chairman Ryan pointed out that the American Red Cross is providing service for the veterans of the World War costing $10,000,000 a year, this being more than all the membership fees paid to the Red Cross during the last roll call.

WINS JUDGMENT FROM LANDLADY

Dispute About Rent Ends Ladger's Tenantcy of Room for Seventeen Years.

Fred Hardy won a judgment of $100 in Judge Valentine's court yesterday in a suit against Mrs. Dema Pedswaitz, his landlady, for $2000 damages. The suit terminated a tenancy of seventeen years.

Mr. Hardy, represented by Walter Gould Lincoln, testified when he reached his room on the night of last February 26, he found he had no home. The bed was turned up, his clothing missing and other belongings thrown about the apartment. He obtained a room elsewhere and located his belongings in a storage house. He said his rent was fully paid up. The defendant asserted the rent was not paid. During the seventeen years he had paid rent, Mr. Hardy said he never received a receipt.

CALIFORNIA GLORIES SHOWN.

Rich-toned Canvases of Western Masters Adorn Walls of Museum at Exposition Park.

heard a woman's voice saying, "I think that foothill picture, by Prof. Judson is the best landscape in the exhibition."

How the years lifted, like a drifting haze! I was again in that adolescent period of the raising of the first mustach, one of a sketching party leaving the studio on the brink of the Arroyo Seco to go roaming through the glen. But I was not looking that day for the rocks of the gorge, or the sycamore and live oak. I saw only a pair of brown eyes, and a profile that recalled the portraits of the winsome and willful wife of Andrea Del Sarto; for I was then in my twentieth year and Cupid was my master.

But a marriage of convenience loomed, wedding an orange grove to a planing mill, and I retired. For youth, like art, is fickle; and a pair of blue eyes and a wealth of nut-brown hair had lured my heart from Italian boudoir to Scotch highlands; from which I have ever since been too loyal, or too timid, to stray. Yet a rush of old memories caused me to turn with passionate interest to inspect the canvas of the old master. The foothills were there, painted in splashes of color that sacrificed detail to the general effect. They were a-bloom with youth and springtime. In the distance, somber and majestic, rose the sentinel mountains. The whole alternated with light and shade, for the blue of the sky was partly hidden by great fleecy clouds whose shadows drifted over foothill and valley. The hand of the old painter has not lost its cunning. None can reproduce foothill scenery with better effect.

But my interest in the exhibition waned. I walked out of the gallery and into the office of the curator, where hangs on the wall a faded and restored portrait of the winsome and willful wife of Andrea Del Sarto. A card attached to the frame credits it to another artist and to a later date; calls it the "Madonna of the Sacred Heart," when the Sacred Heart legend was not born for 100 years after the death of the artist to whom it is accredited.

I have seen the canvases of Del Sarto and I can no more be misled as to that face than a lover can forget the features of his mistress. And the brush that painted it was held by Del Sarto. He was too jealous to permit her to sit for another. It will pay you to examine that portrait before leaving the museum, for it has few equals in this country.

My space is more than exhausted, for the pages of The Times are more limited and less unruly than my imagination. I have not mentioned many of the best canvases in the exhibition. I have neglected Jean Mannheim, Carl Oscar Borg, the two Parshalls and host of others whose productions are fully as worthy as those I have discussed. I have said nothing about the sculptors, a sin for which my friend Edstrom will not forgive me; for he tells me that there are some notable busts in the collection. I have not permission to tell you which, but your own inspection will discover their excellence. Besides, Edstrom is to have an exhibition of his own masterpieces here shortly. It will be a rare treat. I am enamored in advance of his Ophelia and his "Adoration." Their equal has been produced by no American sculptor, not even by Edstrom himself.

But again I am wandering. To me, these artists have done as much for Los Angeles as the Chamber of Commerce. But I am a dreamer, one who follows his illusions out of a second-story window.

ONLY ONE WANTS BELL POSTAL JOB.

Position That Pays More Than Hundred a Month is Going Begging.

There seems to be no rush for the job of postmaster at Bell. It pays $1300 a year, but there was but a single applicant at the civil service examination held yesterday by Secretary Edward Tynan.

The postoffice at Bell was recently raised from the fourth to the third class, and a new appointment is necessary. Bell is a hustling suburb of Los Angeles, but nobody seems to hanker for the task of reading the postal cards.

HUNT FOR THREE BOYS ADVENTURING IN AUTO.

POLICE AND GUARDIAN BELIEVE TRIO SOMEWHERE BETWEEN HERE AND TEXAS.

Believed to be somewhere between here and Texas, George Hamilton, 13 years of age, George Stillwell, 16, and Harry Nauman, 16, Garvanza boys, are in pursuit of romance and adventure. They left ten days ago, taking a discarded 1916 Ford touring car with front seat cut down for a bed, seats covered with brown canvas, new top, two new tires and no license plate. The car belongs to Thomas Hamilton, who is the brother and guardian of the youngest boy. Supplies sufficient for a month were packed in the rear of the car.

The Stillwell boy was born and raised in Texas and has been eager to return there, picturing to his youthful friends a very romantic idea of that State with tales of bronco busting. He is said to be the leader of the runaways and is accused of having stolen a portion of the supplies from a grocery store in Garvanza, where he worked. The two older boys carried guns and are said to have had between $200 and $300 with them.

The juvenile department of the local police is working on the case and word concerning the lads should be sent to police headquarters or to Mr. Hamilton, whose business phone is 10977 and whose residence number is Garvanza 1198.

RESERVE OFFICERS SOUGHT.

During the recent visit to the city of Maj.-Gen. William M. Wright, he addressed a meeting of ex-officers of the Army who served with the Ninety-first and other divisions during the World War and explained reserve plans. It is the desire of the War Department to have all of these ex-officers take their reserve commissions so that they may be assigned to units of the new Ninety-first Division which will be a strictly California unit, and to the corps and Army troops to be made part of the reserves of the Ninth Corps.

Under the new tables of organization, Los Angeles will be the headquarters of a large body of reserve troops, which can be called out only after Congress declares war, but which will form the nucleus for a vast National Army. In fact, it will fall to the lot of this reserve to organize the citizens of the country into fighting units.

The organization has now reached a stage where reserve officers will be definitely assigned to specific units of this vast reserve army, and the War Department is anxious to have all those officers who participated in the late war as members of the Reserve Corps. It is felt that these trained men will come into the reserves now that the government has adopted a definite military policy.

At the meeting Maj. J. W. Sutphen was made chairman and he appointed certain officers to a general executive committee, whose first work will be to get as many ex-officers as possible to join the Reserve Corps. The personnel of the committee is as follows:

For Los Angeles, Lieut.-Col. Starrett Ford, field artillery; Maj. Roy Naftzger, infantry; Maj. Jost, engineers; Maj. Fairbanks, signal corps; Maj. Walter Brinkop, ma- Staff; Capt. Walter Brinkop, machine guns; Lieut. Reed Benham, air service. For Pasadena, Maj. Tingley, infantry. For the southern part of the State, Maj. Shupe, ammunition trains.

As ex-officio members of this committee will be Maj. Sutphen, chairman infantry, and Capt. Silsby M. Spalding, infantry, in charge of coöperation with the citizens' military training camps. On next Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock, in the Blue Room, Los Angeles Athletic Club, there will be held another meeting, to which all ex-officers are cordially invited and at which there will be a full discussion of the plans for organizing the reserves.

VETERANS' BUREAU APPROVES TEN MEN.

Applications of the following men for vocational training under the terms of the Rehabilitation Act have been approved, it was announced yesterday by the United States Veterans' Bureau, rehabilitation division: Clarence L. Atkins, Moulton M. Claus, Edwin L. Fitzgerald, William H. Hattery, James Alonzo Logan, Eugenio Lopez, Edward F. Maloney, Benjamin Franklin Schmidt, Alexander Miller Stout and James A. Tweedie.

TWELVE TO TAKE TEST.

Seven men and five women will take the examination for court reporter in Judge York's courtroom next Saturday morning. The examining committee consists of Norman Sterry, Walter F. Haas and E. B. Drake, the fastest talking attorneys at the bar.

GRID FANS TO INVADE NORTH

Homecoming Day at the University of Southern California has been made the rallying point for hundreds of rooters who will go to Berkeley for the football game with the University of California on November 5. Plans were made yesterday for a jollification on the campus Saturday.

Besides the enthusiastic followers of football who secured reservations weeks ago for the special trip north on the Yale, there are hundreds of others who will make the trip by automobile. Some whose business arrangements made it impossible for them to leave the city earlier say that they will travel all night in their cars for the privilege of seeing the Trojans tangle with the Bears on Saturday.

Homecoming Day festivities will begin with two luncheons at the City Club at 12 o'clock. The Alumnae Club will throw its regular meeting date open to all women graduates and former students, and football spirit will feature the luncheon. University of Southern California colors will be much in evidence. Men of the university will lunch at the same hour at the City Club.

The second event of Homecoming Day, the Pomona-University of Southern California game, is expected to attract thousands to Bovard Field.

Arrangements to send the University of Southern California band of thirty pieces to Berkeley were completed Thursday when $600 to defray the expenses of the musicians was raised at a chapel rally.

After Wednesday the sale of tickets for passage on the Yale, if any be left, will be opened to the public. Reservations may be made at the university office by students or the alumni. The round trip will cost $30, war tax extra.

Pacific Electric trains, connecting with the Yale at the Wilmington docks, will leave Los Angeles at 2 p.m. Friday. The Yale will leave San Francisco on the return trip at 8 p.m. Saturday.

MANY BACK SOUTHLAND CAMPAIGN.

Cities, Counties, Merchants and Commerce Chambers on All-Year List.

A report just made to the executive committee of the All-Year Club of Southern California by its executive secretary, G. G. Milham, reveals that this newest of local civic organizations, unique in its representation of all the Southland, has within a few months won the indorsement of a wider diversity of interests than probably any other movement yet launched in Southern California, with the exception of government or nonsectarian charity campaigns.

The support of the official county boards of Los Angeles, Orange and Ventura, and of the Los Angeles city administration through Mayor Cryer, is included in the extensive list of indorsements. There is, too, the formally registered approval of more than a score of the chambers of commerce of Southern California and of fully two-score of the representative business and trade associations of the Southland. Similar action by many other organizations is now pending.

In the list of indorsements by various commercial boards are the chambers of commerce of Los Angeles, Long Beach, San Bernardino, Riverside, Ventura county, Corona, Santa Monica-Ocean Park, Big Bear, Little Bear, Glendale and a dozen other municipalities. The details of support by the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Orange county are to be decided at a meeting of this organization this week.

The roster of business organizations which have approved the all-year movement reads almost like a catalogue of trade. Mr. Milham's report shows that a partial list of the All-Year Club indorsers includes the Los Angeles Realty Board, Advertising Club of Los Angeles, One Hundred Per Cent Club, Retail Dry Goods Merchants' Association, Commercial Board of Los Angeles, Motor Car Dealers' Association, Apartment House Owners' Association, Southern California Retail Grocers' Association, Stationers' Association, Used Car Dealers' Association (southern branch,) California Retail Hardware and Implement Association, Los Angeles and Southern California Retail Druggists' Association, Wholesale Metal Dealers' Club, Affiliated Motion Picture Interests, Retail Meat Dealers' Association, Wholesale Confectioners' Association, Pacific Coast Merchant Tailors' Association, Music Trades Association of Southern California, General Contractors' Association, Retail Furniture Dealers' Association, Southern California Hotel Association, Wholesale Paper Dealers' Association, Wholesale Furniture Dealers' Association and Wholesale Hay Dealers' Association.

TENTATIVE WEIGHTS OF TRUCKLOADS SET.

STEP IS TAKEN TO PROTECT COUNTY BOULEVARDS FROM RUIN.

Because overloaded automobile trucks tear up county boulevards faster than they can be constructed, a joint meeting of Supervisors and other representatives of eight counties was held in the local board room Thursday. Supervisor Cogswell was chairman. Others present were Dist.-Atty. Utley of San Diego; Supervisor Grier of San Bernardino county; Supervisor Good of San Diego county; Supervisor Pulliam of Imperial county and Supervisor Wassum of Orange county.

It was decided at the conference to establish tentatively a total minimum truckload of 22,000 pounds and a maximum truckload of 36,000 pounds. It was believed that these weights will eliminate a string of trailers so that in future only one trailer to a truck will be used. The present maximum weight is 30,000 pounds.

The new ordinance will be prepared and discussed before being adopted in the several counties.

Savings Account from a Home Garden

Profit and Pleasure Raising Vegetables

Plant a vegetable garden now, watch its growth day by day. Then in the early spring when prices are highest, just start a savings account with the money you save on the vegetables raised. It's a good way to start a boy "making money." It provides wholesome outdoor exercise. And you have plenty of fresh vegetables when they taste best.

Sow Reliable Seed

REMEMBER THIS: A. & M. reliable vegetable seeds and sets have been carefully proved in our own testing grounds. They run true to type, are of high germination, and pure. 28 years in the seed business in Los Angeles has established our reputation for reliability.

Early Peas Sweet as Sugar

Early Spring Peas—the kind that melt in the mouth! A. & M. Perfections mature early, are very sweet and bear prolifically. A favorite among the gardeners because they bring high prices. Plant at once. Packet, 10c; ½ pound, 25c; 1 pound, 40c.

For Salads—Delicious, Appetizing

Los Angeles market lettuce (A. & M. strain) was first introduced by Aggeler & Musser. It has a crisp freshness that simply MAKES any salad. 10c per packet; 60c per ounce.

Endive as well as lettuce should go in the ground soon to be ready for early spring.

Corned Beef and Cabbage!

The delicious flavor of early A. & M. Winnigstadt or Cannonball gives this old fashioned dish a special zest on the cool days of early spring. Transplant now. Price 15c per doz.

Green Stuff

This is the time to plant seed to have early spring greens—Spinach and Mustard. And don't forget Parsley for soups or garnishes. 10c per packet.

And Cauliflower

For early Cauliflower the sets should be transplanted without delay. A. & M. varieties are delicately flavored, with firm white centers. 20c per dozen.

Fine Flavored Onions

By all means try some A. & M. Sweet Spanish Onions. They have a sweet, mild flavor all their own. Price 15c per packet; 60c per ounce. For early GREEN ONIONS do your transplanting of sets right away, and have them ready to pull in 6 to 8 weeks. White, 30c per pound; yellow, 25c per pound.

Poultry Greens

In spring the poultry needs lots of green stuff. Kale and Swiss Chard planted at this time will be ready for feeding in March. More eggs and fine red combed chickens will be the answer. Don't neglect poultry greens.

Holland Bulbs

Don't forget your Tulips, Hyacinths, Crocus and Narcissus bulbs, to go in the ground NOW.

WAD COMIC STRIP AWARDS.

Regulars and Late Comers Share Honors in Prize Contest for Funny Ideas.

Following are the winners in The Times' weekly contest ending last Thursday for ideas for a local comic strip centering about the adventures of the Wad family:

First prize, $10—Frank Harman, Jr., 5200 South Normandie avenue, Los Angeles.

Second prize, $5—William C. Fisher, Saticoy.

Prizes of $2 each for available ideas in addition to the above: Bruce Russell, 2116 Fourth avenue, Los Angeles; Bud Overholtzer, 700 First street, Pasadena; Frank Harman, Jr., 5200 South Normandie avenue, Los Angeles; Miss Edith B. M. Young, Norwalk.

Mr. Harman, who won two prizes in this week's competition, is the second contestant to achieve such distinction.

Maintaining its remarkable hold on the interest of readers of The Times, the daily Wad comic strip contest has become one of the chief sources of amusement—and profit—in Los Angeles and other Southern California communities.

The desirability of being a consistent and regular contestant was demonstrated in last week's competition, where winners in former competitions again were awarded prizes and, at the same time, prizes were won by persons sending in ideas for the first time.

And it seems to be agreed among the hundreds of contestants as well as among The Times' readers generally that the accepted ideas are better and funnier now than in the first two or three contests.

It again seems advisable to suggest to contestants that the best plan for submitting ideas is to briefly and legibly outline the idea in writing, rather than attempt to illustrate it by means of a crude drawing. Of course, pen and ink sketches accurately depicting members of the Wad family and suggesting amusing situations will be acceptable. Two such sketches were accepted in last week's contest. But it takes training to actually draw the strip ready for publication.

A genuine effort is being made to let other members of the Wad family share with Titus Wad in the daily comic strip appearance, but Cousin "Tight" still is far in the lead as a popular subject.

Contestants should not overlook the fact that Miss Elva Wad, Cicero Wad's pretty and frivolous daughter, has many assiduous suitors, each of whom is the particular object of violent objections and, sometimes, attacks by the irate Mr. Wad. Here is a field for fun so far not seriously invaded. Other members of the Wad family and their idiosyncrancies offer unlimited opportunity for laugh-provoking situations.

HALLOWEEN PLANS MADE.

Comprehensive plans for the Halloween carnival to be staged next Saturday afternoon and evening by the Western Woodcraft League at the Hollywood Bowl, have just been announced by Harry C. James, chairman of the general committee.

Rope whirling contest, under direction of Will Rogers, lassoing competitions, with "Hoot" Gibson supervising, a costume pageant, a vaudeville program, personal appearances of many motion-picture stars, concerts by two bands, are included on the program.

Festivities will start at 1:30 o'clock, and last until midnight. The event has been indorsed by the city schools, and is the first large program to be staged by the organization, which is made up of boys and girls interested in out-door lore.

Among the screen stars to appear are Priscilla Dean, Marjorie Daw, Mary Alden, Betty Blythe, Jackie Coogan and little Pat Moore. Other members of the general committee are Ray Pollich and Mrs. F. A. Young. Mrs. J. J. Carter and F. A. Leonard are on the advisory committee. Special car service via Pacific Electric has been arranged.

TEXAS OUT ON BAIL IN CHECK CASE.

Actress Speeds Home After Spending Night in Jail and Facing Court.

With apparent disdain for officers of the law, jails and courts, Texas Guinan, well-known actress and film star, left the County Jail yesterday and, stepping into her expensive car, was hurried away to her home. She had just gone through the formality of being arraigned before Justice Brown on a charge of passing a check for $48.92 on W. F. Wiscombe, a grocer of 4819 West Washington street, for which she is said not to have had sufficient funds in the bank. She had spent the night in the County Jail.

Miss Guinan was taken from the jail to the court by Deputy Constables Stensland and Adams, who, the night before had arrested her. After the court read the complaint, Miss Guinan, who was represented by Attorneys Phillip Cohen and Samuel A. Miller, said: "Your honor, I'm not guilty." It was explained to her that the case would come up for hearing on Tuesday morning and she could present testimony then.

The defendant, through Mitchell Lewis, 1032 Arlington avenue, a motion-picture actor, and R. Miller of 2439 East Seventh street, furnished bail of $1000 and was released until the hearing on Tuesday.

While Miss Guinan was standing in court, she was served with notice of a civil suit against her for $170.88, a balance said to be due Barker Brothers.

Miss Guinan stated in court that there must have been a mistake regarding the check to the grocer, as she was not aware that her bank account was not sufficient to meet it.

BRING DEAD VICTIM OF ZR-2 HERE.

Widow and Baby Accompany Body of Angeleno Home for Burial.

Accompanied by his grief-stricken widow and his baby daughter whose birth preceded his death by only a few days, the body of William Julius, Angeleno whose life was lost in the great dirigible disaster of the ZR-2 in England last August, was brought here yesterday, arriving at 3:30 p.m. on the Santa Fe Limited.

Mrs. Laura Louise Julius, the widow, came all the way from the British Isles with the body. The first intimation of the tragic homecoming was given to the widowed mother, Mrs. Frieda Julius, by representatives of the Y.M.C.A. and they assisted her in making arrangements with the American Legion to take charge of the funeral services.

Mr. Julius, who was 27 years old, was aviation chief machinist's mate at the time of the disaster, which took thirty-four lives, and had been in England a year and a half with American forces. His wife had joined him there. Following the fatal accident, the Y.M.C.A. made arrangements for the return of the body to Los Angeles. Other relatives which he leaves are a brother, Louis Julius of San Fernando, and three sisters, Mrs. Julia Larbick of San Fernando, Mrs. Marie Burgess of Bakersfield and Miss Dorothy Julius of San Jose.

The body was taken to the J. H. Rideman undertaking establishment and funeral arrangements will be announced later.

SAYS FREIGHT RATES EAT FRUIT PROFITS.

MANAGER OF ORGANIZATION ASSERTS FUTURE OF THE INDUSTRY IN BALANCE.

"The future of the fruit industry of California is in the balance with excessive freight rates tipping off all profits," yesterday said J. W. Barnicott, general manager of the United Fruit Company, one of the largest fruit shipping organizations in the State.

"The grower got by this year, or rather was saved by the short crop in the East. The true story of the situation with relation to freight rates can be understood only by a comparison of figures. For example, it costs 72 cents a box to raise peaches, including the preparation of the land, pruning, picking, boxing, etc. Freight to eastern points including refrigeration charges is 60 cents, making a total of $1.32. Peaches have not sold above $1.50 a box and the grower has hardly broken even on the crop.

"The same comparison relative to pears shows a cost charge of $1.60 a box for freight and refrigeration and for plums, 75 cents a crate. In plain English, we are growing fruit for the railroads and take the stand that continued publicity of this fact may, in time, bring a fair reduction."

Mr. Barnicott is also vice-president of the California Association of Nurserymen and, accompanied by Mrs. Barnicott, is visiting the flower show here.

Writers' Club to Open With Spook Festival.

A house warming to formally open the new clubhouse of the Screen Writers' Guild in Hollywood has been planned for the night of the 29th inst. and will take the form of a Halloween party. The property at Sunset Boulevard and Las Palmas avenue has been transformed from an imposing family mansion into an equally attractive home for the writers. The entertainment committee is headed by Marion Fairfax.

The club will be the gathering place of professional writers for the screen, as well as headquarters of literary, dramatic and artistic activities in the West, since the screen Writers' Guild is affiliated with the Authors' League of America as it western branch.

WOMEN ARE TO FORM BROTHERHOOD BRANCH

CHURCH ORGANIZATION WILL TAKE STEP TO ENLARGE SCOPE OF WORK.

Formation of a women's branch of the United Church Brotherhoods of Los Angeles county is contemplated by the organization, Louis C. Dodelan, executive secretary, stated yesterday. First steps toward the carrying out of this plan are expected to be taken soon in the individual churches in which local brotherhoods now exist. Later concerted action from the county organization will handle the incorporation of these local societies as units of the central brotherhood.

The need for interesting the women in the work of the brotherhood is great, according to Mr. Dodelan. He feels that only women can understand and work out some of the problems, which arise in the brotherhood's study of moral issues.

In discussing the proposed plan to organize a women's branch, Mr. Dodelan, called attention to the fact that there is no organization among the women of the church which draws together women of all denominations on the broad basis which is the foundation of the chuch brotherhood. Missionary societies are denominational, each church denomination having its own board of missions. The brotherhood feels that Christian women would realize from interdenominational organization the same broadening effect that has marked the growth of the movement among the laymen of the churches.

The United Church Brotherhoods of Los Angeles was organized in 1919 as part of the World Brotherhood movement.

SAYS SPOUSE STOLE.

The world owed him a living, he said, so he proceeded to take it, according to a divorce complaint made yesterday by Mrs. Annette M. Jackson of Long Beach against Harry F. Jackson. Mrs. Jackson, in her complaint, charges that she lives in constant fear that her husband will be arrested because of his kleptomaniacal tendencies. She says he brought home articles from stores without the formality of paying for them or having them charged.

COLLEGE PLANS ENLARGEMENT.

Foundation Laid by Whittier for Rapid Advancement.

Raises Immense Amount; Wins Rockefeller Aid.

Will Erect Large Dormitory to Accommodate Men.

Face to face with the needs of a greatly increased student body, Whittier College is laying a foundation for a rapid enlargement both in financial backing and building program.

Academically, the college has always stood high among sister institutions in Southern California, but in point of numbers enrolled has remained small. This year the student enrollment increased more than 50 per cent and the board of trustees found itself in somewhat the same fix as the old lady who lived in a shoe.

Feeling that a broad building program can be laid only upon a substantial endowment, Whittier is now adding to its monetary resources some $225,000. Of this amount, $60,000 was offered by the Rockefeller Board of Education, provided Whittier raised the rest. The $200,000 mark has been reached and the total sum is practically assured.

This is only a beginning of what will be needed in the near future, both in endowment and buildings. The community of Whittier proved itself solidly behind its institution of learning by subscribing quickly and cheerfully the entire amount raised in the increased endowment campaign. As yet, no outside help has been solicited.

The high recommendation of Whittier by the Rockefeller Board of Education speaks well for quality of college opportunity offered in the various institutions in Southern California. Such an institution, once it secures the recognition of an organization such as the Rockefeller board, is assured the patronage and support of the educational world.

Whittier is working toward a program that will make the school an efficient institution for 500 students. When this enrollment is reached admission will be gained by application only. Allison & Allison, architects of Los Angeles, are completing plans for buildings which will meet this requirement. Student housing is the hardest problem Whittier is facing at present, especially among the men. The board of trustees hopes to complete a men's dormitory, costing in the neighborhood of $60,000, before next year.

TERMINAL CASE WILL BE HEARD.

Plaza Station Matter is to be Reopened by State Railroad Commissioners.

The State Railroad Commission, sitting en banc, will on Monday reopen the Plaza terminal case in this city. The commissioners, accompanied by City Attorney Stephens and attorneys for the railroad companies, will make a personal inspection of the proposed site of the union passenger station as well as of the Arcade Depot and other sites suggested.

The commission ordered the railroad companies to build a joint passenger terminal at the Plaza, and the attorneys for the companies at once applied for a rehearing, which was granted, on the stipulation by the city and the companies that the evidence, exhibits and arguments submitted at the previous hearing would be the basis on which the new hearing would be granted and that the case would not be gone into again in detail.

Following the inspection trip, the commission will again take the terminal case under advisement on the testimony already submitted and it is expected to render a decision within the next thirty days.

MALIBU ROAD CASE IS PUT OVER TO TUESDAY.

ARGUMENTS IN NEW CHAPTER OF OLD LITIGATION NOT CONCLUDED.

Arguments in Judge Trippet's court, on the motion of the county of Los Angeles to dissolve the injunction issued by the court on the petition of the Marblehead Land Company to restrain the opening of the new county road through the Malibu ranch, were continued yesterday at noon and will be concluded Tuesday. The court reserved his decision in the matter. In the meantime, the temporary order closing the road to travelers remains in full force and effect.

The arguments were by Deputy County Counsels Vallee and Mealey, on the part of the county of Los Angeles, and by Nathan Newby and former Judge Grant Jackson for the Marblehead Company.

It is the contention of the Marblehead Land Company that the county has failed to carry out what the company thinks should have been done in the way of improvements by the county, before the road was opened to public travel.

The county attorneys contend that under the final decree and judgment in the State courts, they were not directed to make any of these improvements, that instrument simply allowing them the land necessary for the construction of a road, with not a word about bridges, etc.

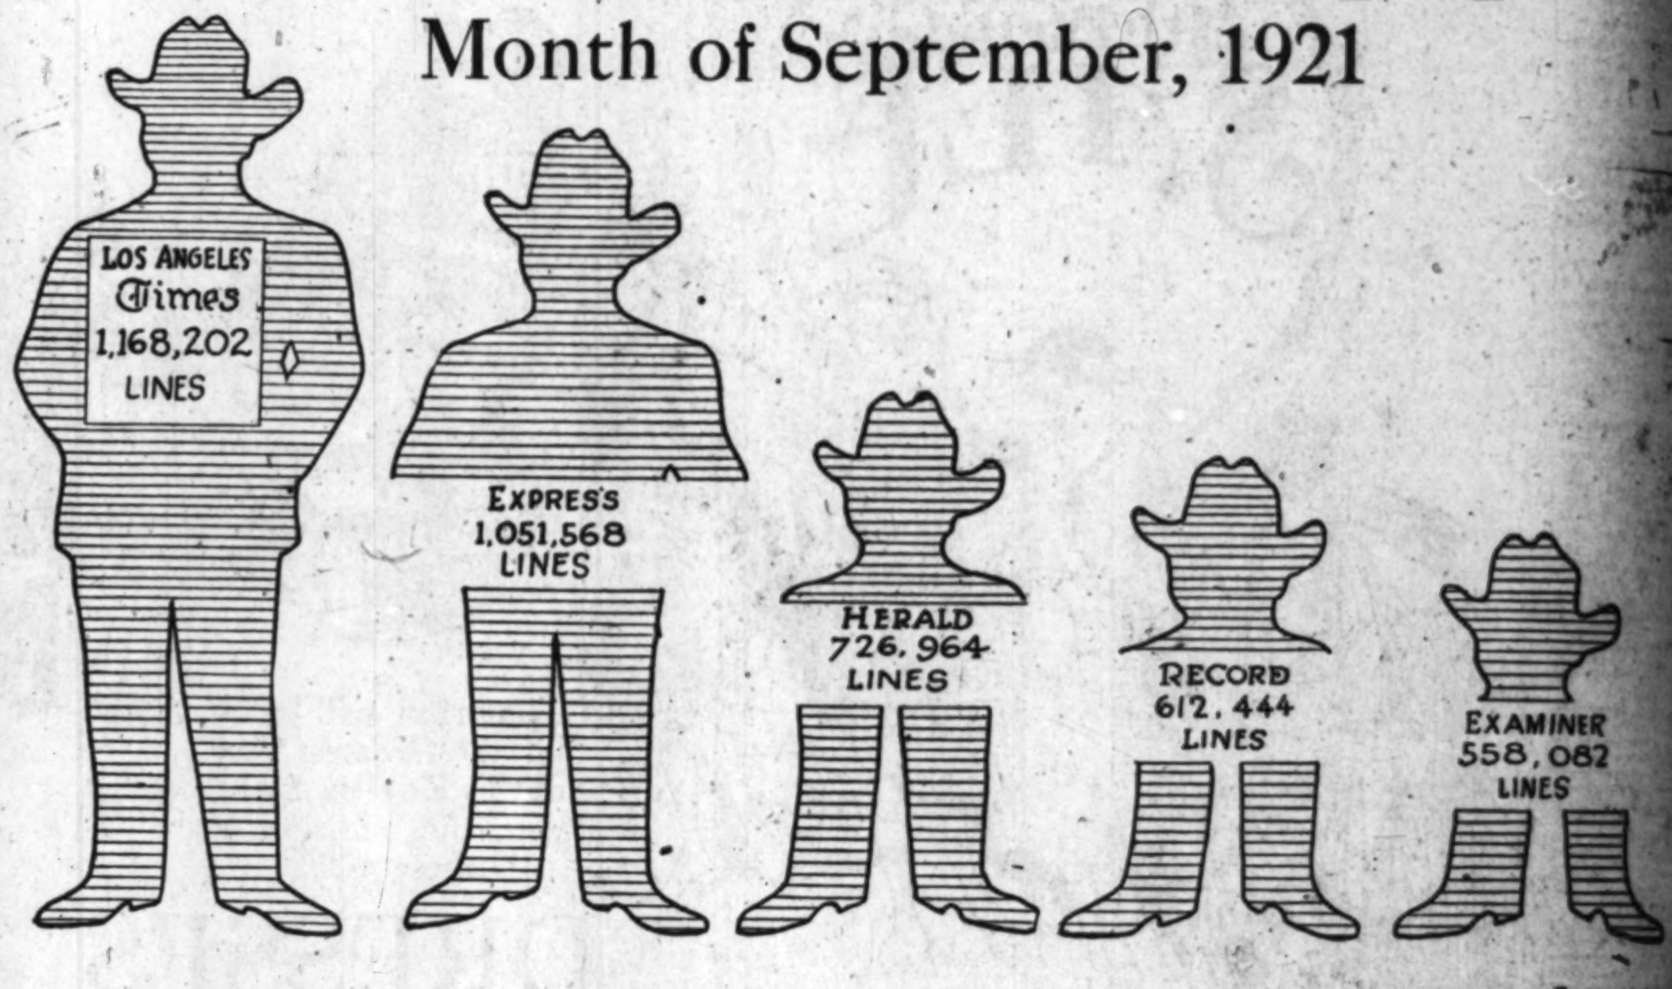
It is also the claim of the county that the heirs of Frederick Rindge, consisting of his widow, May K. Rindge, their daughter, Mrs. Rhoda Rindge Adamson, and their son, Frederick Rindge, owners of the Malibu ranch, in July, last, incorporated the Marblehead Land Company, for the express purpose of getting a hearing in the case in the local Federal courts, after they had been defeated in the State courts. The litigation in one form or another has been in the Federal and State courts since 1894.

HELD AS AUTO THIEF.

Hyman Silverstein, an ex-convict, is in jail at Independence, Inyo county, on the charge of violating the Dyer law—taking an automobile from one State to another without the consent of the owner. Silverstein, it is charged, stole an automobile in this city and drove it to Galveston, Tex. Dep. U. S. Marshal Blakeley left yesterday to bring Silverstein to Los Angeles.

Local Display Advertising in Los Angeles Newspapers

Month of September, 1921



Backing up the judgment of 1800 local business men, as shown by the above chart, is the fact that the LOS ANGELES TIMES prints almost as many Want-Ads as all other Los Angeles newspapers combined. These small advertisers are not tied up with contracts, their choice of mediums newly determined each day, they guided solely by direct results. Th the experience of the masses, as represented by THE TIMES' more than million Want-Ads per year, coincide with the findings of 1800 experts.

Stupendous Circulation Gain

DAILY GAIN	SUNDAY GAIN
22,672	36,900
1920— 85,208	1920—130,999

War Prices for Newspapers No Longer Justified . .

Although all Los Angeles newspapers took an active part in recommending low prices to other business concerns, yet, when the drop in price of white paper made it possible to reduce subscription rates, the LOS ANGELES TIMES was the only local newspaper to do so.

In spite of the addition of costly new reader-features, THE TIMES gave its carrier-subscribers a reduction from $1.05 to 90c per month. Advertisers, through the big increase in circulation, received the equivalent of more than 25% reduction in advertising rates.

While the 15c extra war price which other newspapers continue to collect may not seem large from the standpoint of a single subscriber, yet if multiplied by 50,000 subscribers it becomes $90,000 a year; and if multiplied by 100,000 subscribers it equals $180,000 a year.

The huge advertising and circulation growth of THE TIMES is due in part to the additional patronage of business men and the general public who refuse to pay exorbitant prices to other newspapers in view of the fact that the whole world is making sacrifices.

GAS COMPANY'S RISE RELATED.

Grand-daughter of Early User Tells Industry Romance.

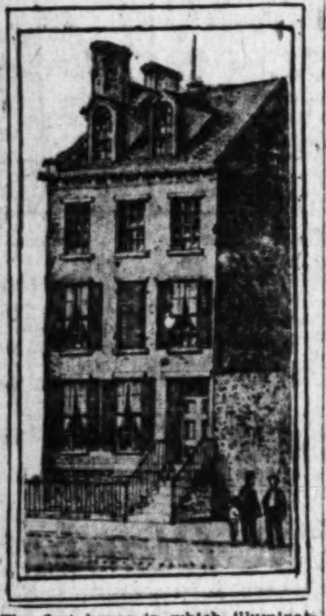
Pioneer Tank Here Opposite Historic Pico House.

Five Men Enough to Operate in Early Days.

Ninety-seven years ago Samuel Leggett, after fierce opposition from neighbors and citizens, illuminated his home at 7 Cherry street, New York, with illuminating gas. His grand-daughter, Sarah L. Leggett, who is now Mrs. S. L. Emory, lives in Laurel Canyon, Hollywood, and remembered hearing of the incidents attendant upon the first venture into the gas business in New York. Twelve years before David Melville had used gas in his home in Newport, R. I.

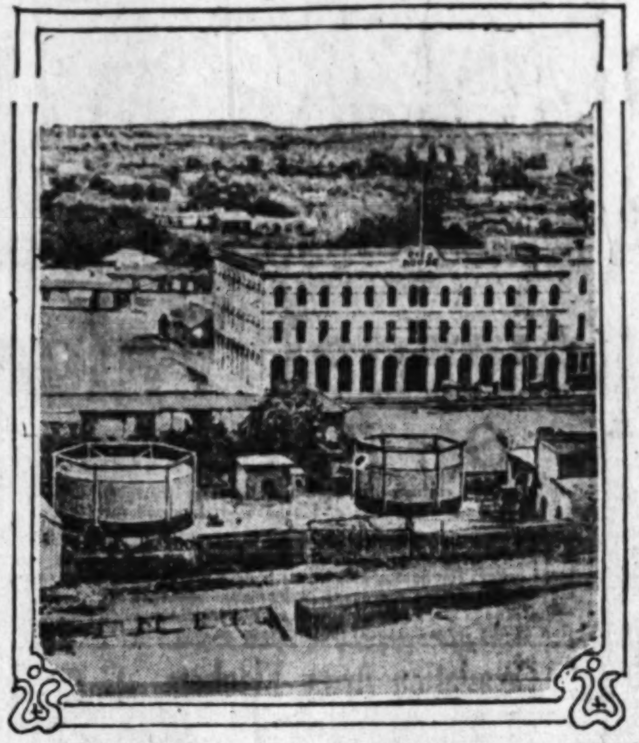
The three-story-and-garret stone house on Cherry street, New York, where Mrs. Emory's grandfather lived, still stands and is in good repair, according to Mrs. Emory. Her father, William Fox Leggett, built a red brick mansion at St. Mark's Place, now Eighth street and Second avenue, New York, where she was born. This house is still in good order.

Manufactured coal gas was not a commodity in this country when Samuel Leggett determined to use it for illuminating purposes. He found much opposition to his plan and ordinances forbidding its use except under certain conditions were passed by the New York Council. However, Mr. Leggett determined to introduce gas and he organized a company with a capital stock of $1,000,000, and he became the first president. That same company is still in existence, but its former name, the New York Light Company, has been changed to the New York Consolidated Lighting Company.



The first house in which illuminating gas was used and which is still standing at 7 Cherry street, New York. Samuel Leggett, first president of the New York Gas Company, lighted this house with gas much to the consternation of his neighbors.

When Los Angeles Was an Infant



First plant of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation, operated from 1867 to 1869 at the Plaza, opposite the old Pico House.

FIRST GAS PLANT HERE.

Interested in the early developments of the gas industry, Mrs. Emery was curious to learn how and when gas was introduced into Los Angeles. She found that gas first became a commodity in 1867, when the Los Angeles Gas Company was formed.

On a parcel of ground opposite the old Pico House at Main street and the Plaza, the first holder was built. It was a crude affair, holding a few thousand feet of gas, but adequate for the needs of 12,000 people, the majority of whom did not favor the "devil gas" either for illuminating or cooking purposes.

Tracing the growth of the Los Angeles Gas Company, organized in 1869, it was found that the concern was merged into the Los Angeles Lighting Company in 1889. During its development, however, electricity was introduced into Los Angeles, and in 1882 the Los Angeles Electric Company was organized. These two concerns were merged in 1904 under the name of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company, and again, in 1909, when the Pasadena Consolidated Gas Company united with the Los Angeles concern, the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation was organized.

DIGS INTO ARCHIVES.

Digging into the archives of the local corporation it was found that in 1889 Los Angeles had grown to a city of 50,000 inhabitants. There are men in the local company who were with the gas corporation more than thirty years ago. They are President W. B. Cline, W. J. Dorr, superintendent of gas distribution; J. B. Ginther, assistant superintendent; W. M. Van Dyke, a director; S. E. Bangerter, foreman and John Boulger, foreman. There are 265 men who have been with the corporation ten years or more and ninety-four who have served for fifteen or more years.

Five men operated the plant when it was first built. It was not much of a job to fill the one holder and when the two gas holders were built they could be filled in a day with enough to last Los Angeles week.

In 1870, three years after the company was formed there were 1000 families in Los Angeles and much of the early work consisted in pipe laying as some of the residences was piped for gas. The superintendent received $90 per month, the gas fitter $80, the two fireman $60 each and the clerk $75; and they did not go out on strike as these were princely wages at that time.

There is now one central generating plant at Aliso and Center streets. The compressor station is on Ducommon street, the carbon yard on Macy street, an immense gas holder with a capacity of 6,000,000 cubic feet on Ducommon street and another almost as large at Seventh and Alameda streets and an immense gas holder in Pasadena. There is also an electric generating station at Palmetto and Alameda streets, six substations in various parts of the city, the electric shop at Seventh and Alameda streets, with storehouses and offices in several parts of the city and with the main offices at 645 South Hill street.

Instead of five employees the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation now employs 3240 people. The pay roll on September 1 for the month of August was $405,285.87. Arrangements have been made for the expenditure of $6,000,000 in additional improvements. This contemplates the extension of gas mains into all the new sections of the city and the erection of a monster gas holder capable of containing 10,000,000 cubic feet of gas at one filling.

—is the slogan of the "Browne-Morse Company"—builders of quality filing equipment and supplies, which tersely describes these steel products.

The Los Angeles Desk Company is sole distributor of the "Browne-Morse Company's steel office equipment in Los Angeles and Southern California.

Real, dependable quality is built into every part and piece of a Browne-Morse filing cabinet. The beautiful dull satin finish; the panelled sides; solid brass trimmings; convenient locking device; interchangeable drawers are some of the exclusive features of these cabinets.

The complete Browne-Morse line of Steel office equipment awaits your visit of inspection at the Los Angeles Desk Company. If beauty, quality and convenience enter into your choice of office equipment—you'll find these and more in the Browne-Morse Cabinets.

TO RENEW WAR ON PAVING MEN.

Protest in Council Tomorrow Defiance to Lobby.

Lyon-Street Improvement Plan Starts the Battle.

Showdown Looms Among City Hall Occupants.

The war at the City Hall to bring an end to the activities of the so-called "paving trust" lobby is scheduled to be renewed tomorrow morning before the City Council when a petition is read from the Industrial Development and Land Company, protesting as unnecessary the proposed paving of Lyon street. While the controversy over the Lyon-street paving work has been brewing at the City Hall since the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation filed its original petition asking that the work be done, the majority property owners' petition of the Industrial Development and Land Company is the first formal step taken which will bring the fight into the open and out of the hands of the lobbyists, who have been quietly working to have the proceedings put through without attracting public attention.

It is by these methods that the paving contractors secure the improvement of many "stub end" and little-used streets throughout the city, and as the proceedings are brought under the Act of 1911, the majority property owners are virtually without recourse to prevent the work from being done.

INJUSTICE CHARGED.

The petition filed yesterday by the Industrial Development and Land Company, through W. R. Lawson of the company, represents a majority of the total street frontage on Lyon street, and the protest declares that to pave the street will be an injustice and a useless expense as the present pavement is sufficient for the limited traffic on the street, which runs north of Macy street, to a "blind" ending at the entrance to the Wilson Packing Company plant.

Unless the "paving trust" lobby runs to cover because of the publicity which has been given to the Lyon-street case, it is expected that the vote on the ordinance of intention for paving the street which is expected during the first week in November, will be based squarely on the issue of whether or not the lobby is to control the City Council in the matter of paving jobs to be put through, despite the protests of property owners, or whether the Councilmen are willing to give heed to the desires of taxpayers and to disregard the demands of the contractors who have paving material to sell and who are seeking streets on which to lay it.

It is expected that if the fight against the paving trust lobby gets into full swing, the Public Works Commitee of which Councilman Wheeler, the former Socialist and Labor Temple leader, will be drawn into the battle, as proposed street improvements are referred to this committee and except in cases to which the attention of the other Councilmen have been especially called, Chairman Wheeler's recommendations are usually followed, because of the unfamiliarity of the other Councilmen with the details of the proposed work.

PETITION FOR PAVING.

The facts in the case of Lyon street are that the petition was filed for the paving of the street by the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation, which owns a minority of the frontage on the street. The lobbyists saw to it that the proceedings were brought under the Act of 1911. The petition of protest of the majority property owners has now been filed.

Had the street proceedings been brought under the Vrooman Act, this petition would have automatically killed the proposed paving job. But now it will require a vote by the Council to prevent the lobbyists' plan for paving the street going through, and it is believed that when the final vote is taken the wishes of the majority property owners will prevail because of the strong distaste the Councilmen have for giving their constituents any ground for believing that the old-time "paving trust" lobby is again all powerful at the City Hall.

It is possible that if the lobby decides to fight, property owners, backed by Councilmen opposed to the lobby, will go into action and expose the entire working of the City Hall lobby, and its efforts to manipulate municipal legislation and legislators.

Widow, Cut Off in Will, to Open Fight in Court.

The late William G. Eckert, who cut off his widow, Clara Brooke Eckert of Van Nuys, and his son, Robert J. Eckert, with $5 each, leaving the bulk of his estate to Cora J. Parsons of San Fernando, wrote in his will that but for the care and kindness of Cora J. Parsons he would probably have been sent to the County Hospital.

The bequest was intended to pay her for this kindness and consideration. The will also stated that Mrs. Eckert and her son were living apart from him.

The contest of the will by Mrs. Eckert, who declares the drawing of the will was influenced by Cora J. Parsons, was set for trial in Judge Hewitt's court tomorrow.

FUNERAL CONDUCTED FOR VETERAN ACTRESS.

Mrs. J. M. Harris, better known as Anita Merlo of Harris and Merlo, vaudeville travesty artists, prominent on the Keith and Proctor circuits from 1900 to 1908, was buried yesterday in Evergreen Cemetery. Services were in charge of Bresee Brothers. Mrs. Harris was 52 years of age and leaves her husband, J. M. Harris, and a sister, Miss Mary T. Merlo of New York City. Her stage careet centered in "The Yankee Doodle Girl" and "The Woman and a Fool." Funeral services were conducted from the family residence, 1230 East Sixtieth street.

ASK PROBATE OF WILL.

Petition for the probate of a will left by Manuel B. Hutchinson of Whittier, disposing of an estate valued at $125,000, was made yesterday in the Superior Court here. One-half of the estate is left to Mrs. Alice J. Hutchinson, the widow, and she is given an allowance of $5000 a year as long as she remains unmarried. A number of nieces and nephews as well as friends share the balance.

NEW WHIRLS IN COMEDY.

Even the Custard Has Grown More Fastidious.

They Have Sets, Costumes and Lots of Acting.

Al Christie Tells Why It Can't be Otherwise.

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT.

Say what you will and do what you may, it's impossible to keep the comedies from taking themselves more and more seriously each day. It's becoming a chronic condition this seriousness. It's gotten so now, in fact, that you can't think of making a fun film without just as much fuss and fuming and fiddling as goes with a feature.

No longer can producers depend on the handy street corner, the country grocery or the ubiquitous puddle for humor. Street corners must be built; groceries must be fitted out with soft tomatoes, indigent eggs and cosmetically-inclined flower paste, and puddles must have a pedigree. No longer may a director rely on the trusty overalls and the old plaid skirt, for the most muddified results. It's the swallow-tail and white front or nothing that serves to make the howls more hallowed now.

Soon, too, I suppose, no cast will be complete that is composed of routine funny men recruited from the circus or vaudeville. But we must also have trained actors and actorettes, who, while exhaling a thespianic sigh, will plunge headforemost into the all-embracing barrel of custard.

The day has come when even slapstick to get over must have class and polish, not merely a close shave and a shine. As a matter of fact the day has come and stayed. The principle that the "rational alone is real" has been for several seasons pervading the confines of those studios where dizziness is the most prized virtue.

However, it is not with the slapstick in particular that I am concerned on this occasion. My pathways lies rather toward the smoother terrain occupied by the light comedy—for my most recent conversation on the subject of what is amusing on the screen has been with Al Christie, renowned as the man who took the "dome" out of domestic and put the "bun" in bungalow.

Christie is just about to celebrate the tin anniversary of his arrival in Hollywood, which he helped to found, as a film capital, if you will recall. I don't know just what sort of festival he's going to stage to signalize the affair, but whatever it is it will probably be clubby. Don't gather though, that it's an occasion for sending a set of wooden mallets out to the studio, because such things are eschewed in the Christie comedies.

Well, so much for the anniversary, except that I might mention that the festival will be celebrated exactly on the same spot where Christie first moved into the movies—for the present location on Sunset and Gower streets he occupied ten years ago when he was making a reel or a split reel—which is something like a pint or a half pint—for Nestor release.

The most striking phase of Christie comedy-making at the present moment seems to be the fact that at the studio they've grown all excited about the costume comedy.

Which, if you will notice, is keeping right up with the features.

They've already burlesqued "Romeo and Juliet," and "The Three Musketeers," and soon they're going to make a wild tale laid in some Balkan principality, resembling "The Prizoner of Zenda."

Every one of these pictures has to be all dressed up like an ostrich, with plumed hats—not to speak of

BUSHMANS EN FAMILLE.

Little Richard Provides the Chief Diversion.

Pater and Mater Expect Soon to Visit Europe.

May Do "Romeo and Juliet" in Vaudeville, Too.

BY GRACE KINGSLEY.

"Give up little Richard for my people to take care of? I should say not!" exclaimed Mrs. Francis X. Bushman, who, you know, is Beverley Bayne professionally. "Why, he's a perfectly good child—not a bit of trouble!"

It seems that some of Mrs. Bushman's people have been trying to persuade the fond parents to let them care for their 3-year-old son while they are on the road.

"And as for travel hurting the child," interrupted Francis X., "sleeping cars just rock him to slumber. Why, he seems to thrive, and the milk we used to give him, warmed over alcohol lamps on trains and in hotels just made him grow more husky."

We were talking in the Bushmans' dressing-room at the Orpheum. Though a little cretonne curtain hung between their dressing tables, extending nearly across, and making a theoretical partition, one felt distinctly at the moment that Mr. Bushman was shaving.

"Besides," contributed Mamma Bushman, "it would break his little heart to be separated from us. He's so obedient and everything."

And she went back to beading her eyelashes.

Just then little Richard Bushman, who looks as much like his beautiful mamma as a lusty kid that's all boy could, romped in. I'm sure he's a good child, but there was a look in his eye that seemed to say that he was out in search of fun. His nurse, I felt right then, has few dull moments. He began proving it by dragging her forth by the hand down to the stage.

"No," continued Miss Bayne, after she'd told me about his knowing his rhymes from cover to cover. "Richard is just the best child. Sometimes I think," she went on confidentially, in a hushed voice, "that he's almost too angelic, too—"

Just then something dropped with a dull, sickening thud.

"Oh, that's Richard!" cried Mama Bushman, with surprising intuition.

KNOWS REPRESSION.

Sure enough it was Richard, behind the scenes.

But little Richard is wise to the traditions of the theater, and though he had fallen off a chair with a rousing bump, and there was a big blue lump already beginning to rise on his little dome of thought, he choked back his sobs as his nurse rescued him.

We settled ourselves, and began talking about the plans of the Bushmans for their stay here.

"We want to go to Catalina before we leave," suggested Mr. Bushman, with oracle-like voice proceeding from behind the curtain.

"Only we don't know but that Richard might be seasick," put in Mrs. Busnman.

"Well, anyhow, there's Tijuana," went on Mr. Bushman.

"Why, dearie, take little Richard to such a place!" demurred Mrs. Bushman firmly. "I should say not! The dear little angel——"

Thump, thump came a noise from overhead, and then a kid yell.

"Where's Richard?" demanded Mama Bushman apprehensively.

Sure enough, where was Richard? Papa Bushman dashed madly out of the dressing-room.

There was the angelic boy, perched high up on the elevator used by the stage hands to raise and lower things to and from the flies. He had stuck on while they

SMART MUSIC SHOW IS PROMISED AT BURBANK

At taste of realism is awaiting Burbank patrons, beginning today. The Hi Jinks Revues will present one of the most spectacular musical comedies since their arrival here.

The combined talents of the sixty or more members of the company and the technical force of the Burbank stage, under the direction of Edgar Barnett, have rehearsed the massive production for a week and are in readiness for perusal.

The beauty chorus will be in evidence with ten complete changes of costuming, while the various members of the company will also follow the theme of the production by constantly appearing in a variety of smart gowns and costumes.

Al Bridge will head the delegation of joymakers. Others in the cast are Jean Darby, Olga Brooks, Grace Jennings, George Clark, the Kemball Four, while the Burbank beauty chorus will uphold their reputation as a smart aggregation.

PLAY READINGS.

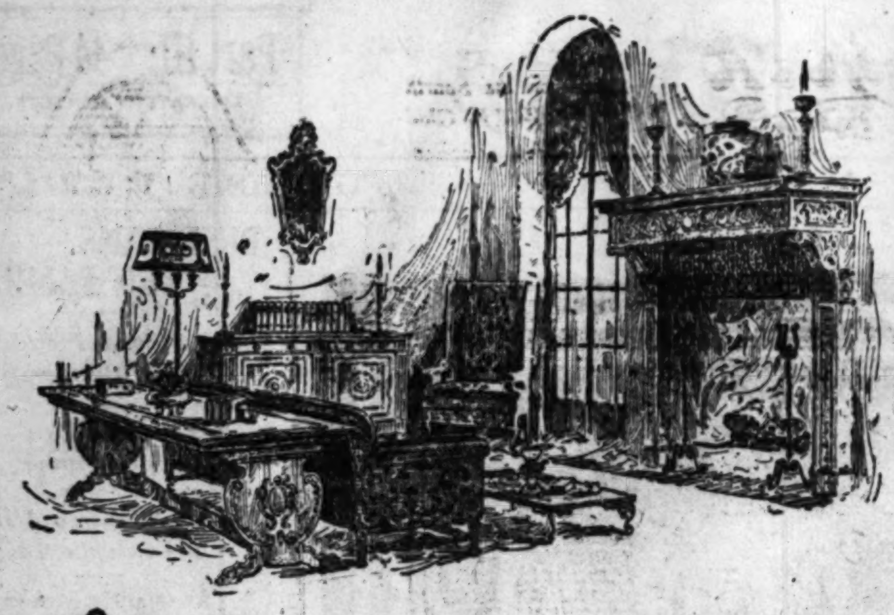
The regular weekly meeting of the Playcrafters will be held next Monday evening, in Room 206 Tajo Building. Two one-act plays will be read by the authors: "Evaporated," by Sydney Sprague, and "Spotlight," by Mrs. Wilfred Simpson.

BIFF! WESLEY TAKES COUNT IN "PENROD."

Wesley Barry has learned the meaning of the phrase, "Art for art's sake." It was in a scene for "Penrod," Marshall Neilan's picture now in the making, when Wesley and little Maurice Levey were scheduled to put on a lively scrap during the children's pageant. "Give us a real scrap," said Mr. Neilan to the young gladiators. At the word, Maurice rushed in on Wesley. Biff! And while it would be desirable, perhaps, to report that it was Wesley's blow, still the facts are it was Wesley's chin that stopped the blow whereupon the little freckle-faced star became acquainted with a lot of other little stars and counted them as he reclined in an ungraceful pose on the floor. It was as it should be as far as the script was concerned, but when the scene was completed Wesley kept his position on the floor. It took Marjorie Daw's smelling salts to bring him to.

McGROARTY WRITES TITLES.

Titles for three one-reel scenics entitled "The Missions of California" have been written by John Steven McGroarty, author of the "Mission Play."



DEDICATED TO BETTER HOMES

Every Week at the "California" Is Better Homes Week

"Dedicated to Better Homes." What words can better summarize the mission of the "California"?

The Better Homes Week just ended typifies the sixteen years of effort that the "California" has devoted to the creation of Better Homes throughout Southern California.

Every week during these nearly two-score years has been a Better Homes Week at the "California."

It is a particularly happy coincidence for the "California" and for its patrons that Better Homes Week should have been inaugurated at the time when prices throughout the "California" are at the new low levels and when the stocks of this institution are so replete with unusually beautiful and distinctive examples of the home furnishing art.

A visit to the "California" at this time will prove unusually interesting. Whether you purchase or not makes no difference in the cordial welcome that will be accorded you.

And a comparison of the values now existing at the "California" will be particularly gratifying.

OF ART AND ARTISTS.

BY ANTONY ANDERSON.

Autumn Treasure.

Who will gather with me the fallen year,
This drift of forgotten forsaken leaves,
Ah! who give ear
To the sigh October heaves
At summer's passing by!
Who will come walk with me
On this Persian carpet of purple and gold
The weary autumn weaves,
And be as sad as I?
Gather the wealth of the fallen rose,
And watch how the memories south wind blows
Old dreams and old faces upon the air,
And all things fair.

—Richard Le Gallienne.

Etchings by the Masters.

The collection of etchings now on exhibition in the Stendahl galleries, Ambassador Hotel, reveals a rare discrimination in the selections of artists, in variety of subjects, and in quality of impression. There are less than 150 etchings in the entire group distributed between the recognized masters of the graphic art, from Duerer and Rembrandt to Zorn and Cameron, and the American contemporary etchers. The value of a collection of etchings or of a single etching is qualitative rather than qualitative, and the Stendahl collection presents a balance and standard of excellence not often attained.

This is a rather formidable introduction and sounds as if Stendahl were conducting a course in higher art. Nothing is further from the fact. The etchings are exquisite examples of the most intimate and personal of all the arts, and if the collector, of whom there are many, finds joy in rare proof and mint impression, in like measure the lover of all things beautiful finds beauty and charm, mystery and fascination in the Venice of Whistler and the Paris of Meryon, in the frank and unabashed nudes of Zorn, and in the quiet English landscapes of Haden.

The pioneers of the art, Duerer and Rembrandt, are finely represented. Duerer's "Melancholia" was made in 1514, and for more than 400 years it has remained one of the unsolved problems of the art world. Is it an allegorical picture of Leonardo da Vinci, master of so many arts, baffled by the human limitations, surrounded by the tools of his craft, contemplating in brooding melancholy the inability of attainment, the impossibility of genius materializing its aspirations? Is the figure "1" a hint of an unfinished set or series, or is it a letter "I," imperative tense of the Latin verb "to go," and is the true title "Melancholia Avaunt"? Is the thirty-four acrostic a bit of occultism, or is it a subtle reference to the dates of the death of Duerer's mother? We do not know, and we can only guess and speculate.

The impression of the "Melancholia" in the Stendahl collection is a superb proof from the Marietta collection, and still bears on its reverse, in faint ink, the signature of the famous collector, "P Marietta, 1666." There are several other Duerers, the famous "Apollo and Diana," and the "Frederic Electeur" among them.

The Rembrandts include portrait, religious and landscape subjects, of which the "Landscape With the Square Tower" is the most famous. The Meryons are fine examples of the Paris etchings, and boast an impression of the rare and costly "L'Abside de Notre Dame." The Sir Seymour Hadens are rich in two of his most famous plates, the "Sunset in Ireland" and the "Shere Mill Pond," of which latter plate Hamerton, the chief of the English critics, says: "It is the supreme landscape etching of all times." The chief interest and enjoyment of the collection, however, undoubtedly rests with the Whistlers and the Zorns.

The Whistlers include examples of the Paris set, the Thames set, and both the Venetian sets. There are ten of them, all brilliant impressions, all full of the things that once earned Whistler the reputation of eccentric genius, and now entitle him to the unanimous acclamation of print lovers and print connoisseurs throughout the world.

In Whistler the art found its culmination, its realization. For etching is essentially the art of elimination, of simplification, of the concealment of the means. And in all of these Whistler is the supreme artist, the perfect exponent. Along with his picture he conveys the accompanying atmosphere, the very sounds and odors of the reality he depicts. His Venice is the Venice of Browning, his London the London of Dickens, personal, compelling, real.

Zorn is the admitted master etcher of the nude. His models, daughters of the vikings, face the rush of wind and wave happy and unafraid. His people are the Dalecarlian peasants, the strong simple folk of the north. And he etches with a needle that is as swift and vigorous as his brush. No technical difficulties seem to check him, no problems give him pause. For Zorn etches as another man shoots, sails, or rides—for the sheer human joy of doing it, without a thought of its purpose, without a care of its ultimate reception by the critics. The result is a style so personal, so spontaneous, so full of the freshness and verve of life, that one cannot possess his etchings, or even look at them, without falling under the contagious spell of his joyous mood. Zorn's etchings are undoubtedly among the most human documents art has ever produced.

The American contemporary etchers are ably represented. Benson with his "Wild Birds," Troy Kinney with his "Etchings of the Dance," Levy and Heintzelman with their portrait etchings, and Ernest Haskell with his trees, all are there, and all are interesting.

Webster, and Pennell, and Orr, the three exponents of architectural etching, are included, and the Pennells, covering three periods and three cities as subjects, London, New York and San Francisco, are splendid examples of the work of the dean of American etching.

MacLaughlin, who is an American by birth, but who has spent most of his life in Italy, has a beautiful set of Venetian etchings, and Washburn, who is undoubtedly destined to become the chief of the present American group, is represented by subjects drawn from Mexico and Arizona, Siam and California.

The collection has an almost unbelievable amount of concentrated beauty and interest, a relation and cohesion rarely found in exhibitions today, and should prove a magnet for art lovers of the community. The exhibition will remain at the Stendahl galleries for several weeks.

Letter from Helma Heynsen Jahn.

Helma Heynsen Jahn, who went from Los Angeles to Munich to pursue further art study some time before the war, is still there, though she is anxious to come back to America. The following letter to a personal friend in Los Angeles will be of great interest to the readers of this column, all of whom are probably conversant with her fine work in portraiture. She has painted portraits of many well-known professional and business men in Los Angeles.

She writes this charming letter from Elisabethstrasse, 3, Munich:

Since long I wanted to answer your kind letter from April 7, and I feel sorry that your letter remained unanswered for so long a time. My work demanded almost every minute of my time, trips to the Rhine and to the various castles in Bavaria, where I had to paint portraits, were the reason of the delay—added to it a three weeks' stay with mother dear in Lubeske, where I took such a serious cold that I had to stay in bed most of the time. The summer is most beautiful this year, we had really California heat, and you can imagine how I enjoyed this. I was glad to hear that you and your family are well and enjoy the beautiful climate.

How many changes will I find when I come back! Just now Mrs. Brand and Mrs. Ley are in Europe. In June both of them were in Munich and I enjoyed their visit here very much. Aunt Ley is now in Paris, but intends to come back about September, and Mrs. Brand is in Frankfort and will return to Munich end of August. I am doing Mrs. Ley's portrait life size, three-eighths length. She and I hope that it will give me a footing in New York.

Some real good outlooks in America will bring me over and back to America. I cannot very well give up such a good situation as I have here now for an uncertainty abroad, you will understand this. I have very much work to do; my pictures are appreciated by artists as well as the public—the orders come more than I can fill, and I can ask almost any price. Does my work please in New York and I get some good orders through it, which will enable me to stay for some time in America, I come over to do some work, and certainly shall come for a short stay in my dear, beloved California. I longed so for all these years.

I suppose for a few years I shall have to journey between America and Germany doing portrait work, until I have reached the position to choose where I want to stay and make my home. I wish I had already succeeded in doing this choice, for this kind of an artistic gypsy life does not please me at all—nothing more beautiful than to have a home from where you can spread and concentrate the strength. Since 1906 I have now lived this life of an Ahasuerus, with all its shadows and lights, successes and disappointments, work serious, almost strenuous work, this terrible war, hunger, cold, death, revolution — it was a labyrinth where one event

Pre-Holiday Suggestions

Each year there is always the good resolution made of doing the Christmas shopping early. It is only a matter now of a few short weeks, and there can never be the same personal and comfortable feeling of intelligent selection the last hectic days, and this is only a little reminder of the good resolution you made. And then there is a very great surprise in prices. It will surprise you how inexpensive a really good thing is. Venetian glass, French porcelains and bronzes, lamps and shades, and the more pretentious gifts of fine old tables and cabinets, needlepoint and tapestry, beautiful antique mirrors and appliques, prints and etchings, and paintings by modern masters.

TORONTO STUDIES FALLING STARS.

Northern Skies Streaked With Large Number of Meteors, Followed by Vapor.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

TORONTO (Ont.) Oct. 22. The Northern skies, during clear nights this autumn, have been streaked with an unusually large number of falling stars. The display has had the striking feature of showing sparks and smoke or vapor in the trails of the meteors.

At the observatory here a study of the phenomenon is being made.

Tucson, Ariz., collector and art critic, owner of the largest collections west of the Rockies; Benjamin J. Hampton, collector and capitalist of Los Angeles; Lockwood De Forrest of Santa Barbara, member of the National Academy of Art, wood-carver, collecter, critic, an international figure in art circles, having been sent to India to revive for us certain forms of wood-carving and architecture; served on the jury of awards at St. Louis Fair and Panama Exposition; Ernest A. Bachelder of Pasadena, writer on art topics, critic—served on jury of awards at St. Louis Fair.

The art committee of the Southwest Museum will also request three of the eight judges to constitute the hanging committee, but the names of those three will not be made public.

It is expected that acceptances will be received within the next few days from the remaining members to make the jury complete.

News and Notes.

The welcome news comes that at last the National Academy of New York will accept pictures outside the medium of oil. We have to thank the energetic Joseph Pennell for this great concession.

The sculptures and miniatures of the twelfth annual exhibition of the California Art Club, and a few of the paintings, will receive attention next week in our columns.

Californian Ranks High as Violin-Maker.

Violins, poems, wine—these are things whose real quality is only to be determined by time. Therefore, it is too soon to prophesy that the violins now being made by Alfred Lanini in San Jose, Cal., will eventually rank with the great creations of Stradivarius and Amati. But, according to many musicians who have handled Lanini's violins, it is not a bit too soon to say that there is in California an instrument-maker who deserves to rank very high among his contemporaries.

Alfred Lanini is 30 years of age. His parents are Italian-Swiss, and his father settled in the Santa Clara Valley in 1876. Young Lanini became passionately fond of the violin as a child, and his first one was made out of a cigar box.

On entering the San Jose High School, he found a master in the late Dr. W. B. Hill, an enthusiastic and talented amateur. Finishing school, Lanini looked in vain for a professional teacher. At last he decided to go to Italy, where violin-making is still a living art.

In Italy his first master was Antoniazzi of Milan. When this famous maker died, he left his models, drawings and tools to Lanini, his latest and best pupil. Then, after studying the art of repairing for some time under Farotti, reputed to be the best in Milan, Lanini returned to San Jose in 1914.

Since 1914 Lanini has made fifty-seven violins—quite an output for a man who is still under 30. He uses Italian-Swiss wood when this is obtainable, and his violins are modeled after those of Stradivarius, Guarnerius or Camilli. He has several times used a certain species of Sierra pine to advantage, but this wood is hard to obtain in its best condition, as selection is not standardized with us as it is in Europe.

Lanini's varnish is made after a recipe given him by Antoniazzi—a recipe which the latter claimed to have been Storioni's own. It acquires a rich gloss with age. Lanini has also made several violas and 'cellos.

Argentina has twenty-two public holidays during the year, Germany nineteen, Italy nineteen, Rumania twenty-four and India twenty-one.

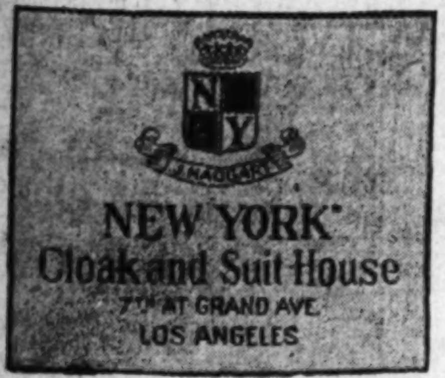
The Label that went Into A Competitor's Coat!

A gentleman high up in the affairs of the Mason Opera House, and whose name we shall be glad to furnish on request, vouches for this as an actual incident.



J. J. HAGGARTY
NEW YORK

7TH AT GRAND AVE.
LOS ANGELES

THIS is about a young woman who had more taste for style than appreciation for value.

It seems that she had the erroneous impression that, while a New York Store label meant the last word in fashion, it also stood for a high price, too high, in fact, for her. So when she bought her new coat, she went to a store which thinks only of how a garment looks when it is sold, regardless of whether it has good wearing qualities or not, and paid a medium price. Then she came to the New York Store, bought a marked-down hat, took the label out and sewed it in her coat. She wanted people to see the New York Store label when she laid the coat over the back of the seat in the theater!

IN ONE way this young woman knew a good thing when she saw it, in another she did not. If she had come to the New York Store in the first place, she would not only have bought a coat at a moderate price, but she would have had one that was both stylish and of good honest quality. And the coat would have had a New York Store label in it.

NEW YORK STORE garments are not high priced; you can buy a coat or suit or dress here for as little as you can anywhere else. And it will not only be stylish, but it will be of a design that is an assured one, not a transient, one-season mode. The fabric will be good, for here at The New York Store, we consider that cheap fabrics are poor economy. And what is perhaps the most important of all, the workmanship will be of the highest standard, conscientious in hidden details as well as those that meet the eye.

A New York Store label is something to be looked for from a style viewpoint, but one is not penalized by high prices to get it, which proves over and over again that

"The Best Boys' Clothes in Los Angeles"

The Slogan of the Boys' Shop, With Its Truth Proven In

Boys' All Wool Two Knicker Suits 15.00—18.50—20.00—24.50

Nobody would change the "boy" of things if he could—but it was a long time before the importance of boy-proof clothes was established in the minds of tailors and manufacturers. Possibly because it used to be a case of "cutting down Dad's"—until the time came when Young Bob awakened the world to the possibilities in his own figure and the limitations of his dad's.

At any rate—REAL boys' clothes for REAL boys are now one of the prides of the tailor's art—and the stock at Hamburger's is the result of specialization in material, tailoring and value, until we earnestly invite your COMPARISON to prove them "the best boys' clothes in Los Angeles."

Correct fabrics—correctly tailored for endurance and appearance—in all the popular and authentic styles for boys from 6 to 18 years of age.

The Pictures Tell the Story of This

Sale of Dresses at $24.98

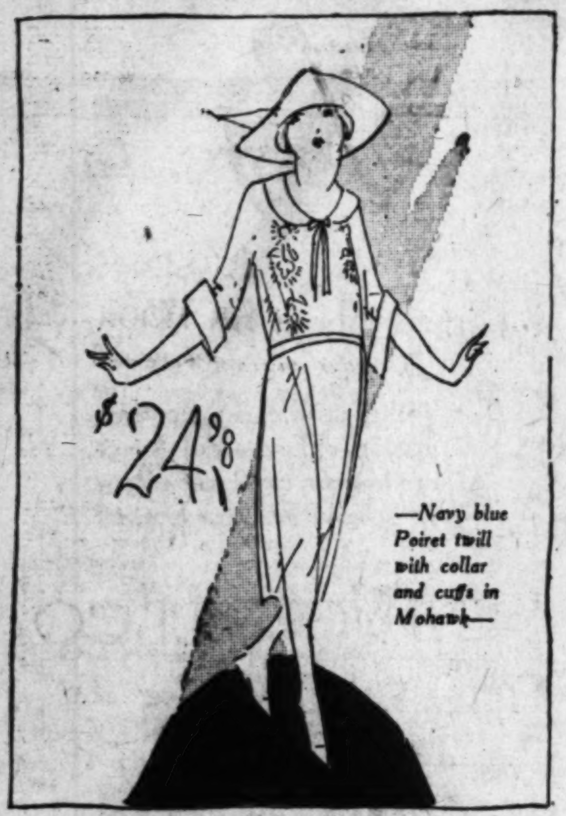
And if you read the pictures, as the writer does (of course he has seen the dresses themselves and knows much that pictures can't tell) you'll recognize this as one of the most important offerings of dresses of the whole year.

—There are many dresses in this sale that we would sell in the regular way at more than double the sale price—there are none that would be sold for less than a half more—

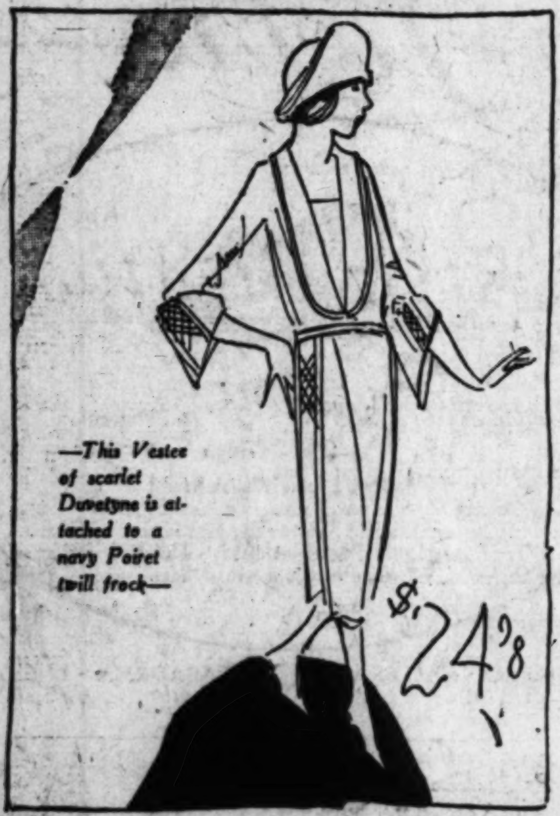
—200 dresses and more in all—and every one of them brand new—a style that could rightfully demand a place in regular stocks—

—The fact that we can make this out-of-the-ordinary offering right at the height of the season—is not a happenstance by any means—we've been planning and working for weeks—but we did what we had been told, "couldn't be done"—and found even ourselves surprised at the results—

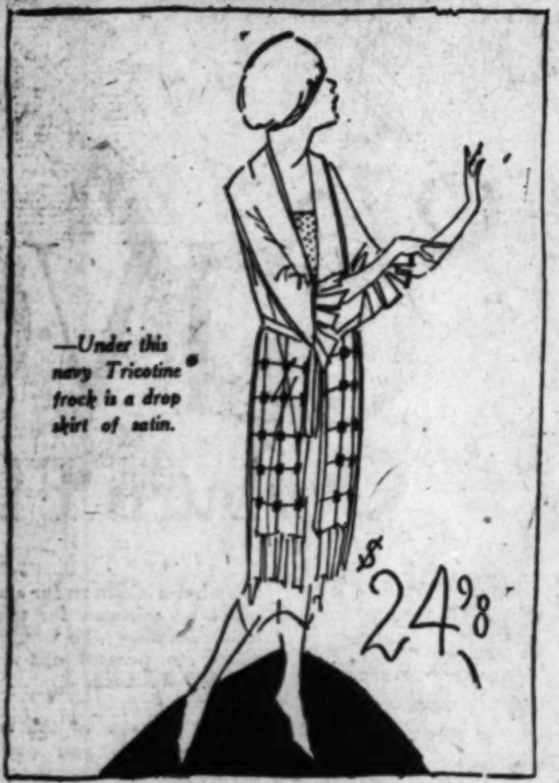
—See the dresses themselves in our windows today, and in the new garment store—Monday.



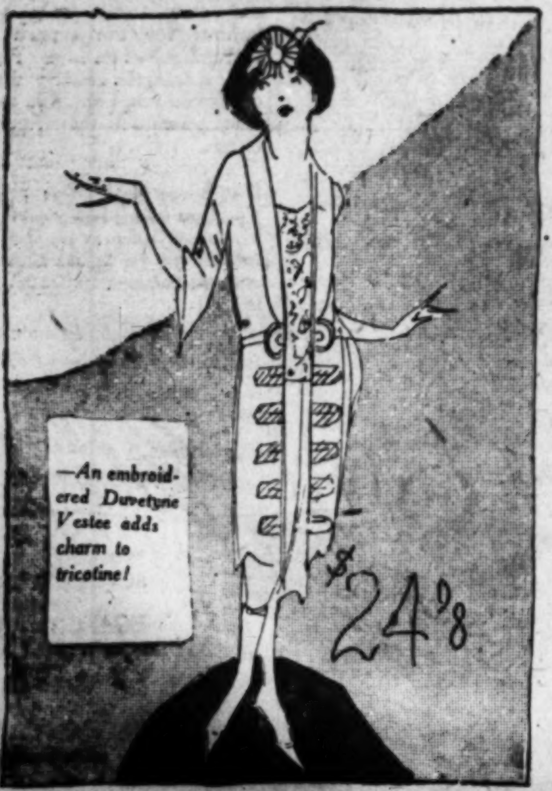
—Navy blue Poiret twill with collar and cuffs in Mohawk—



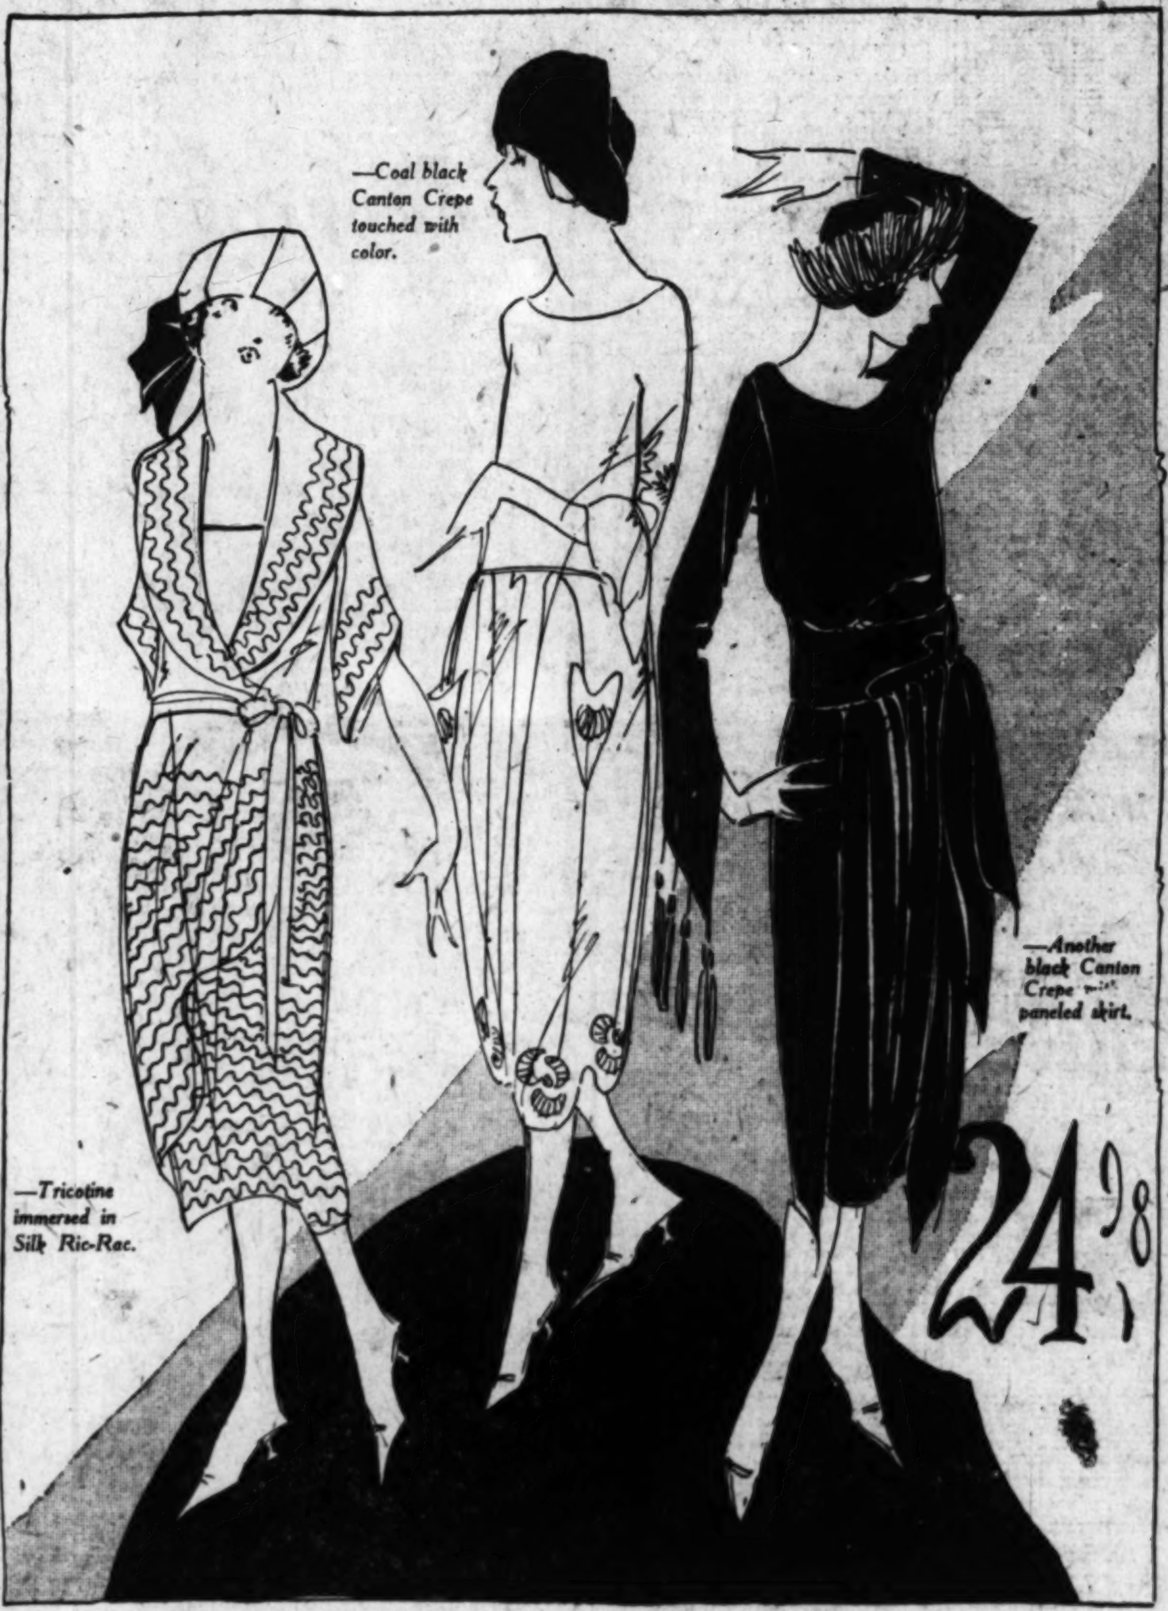
—This Vestee of scarlet Duvetyne is attached to a navy Poiret twill frock—



—Under this navy Tricotine frock is a drop skirt of satin.



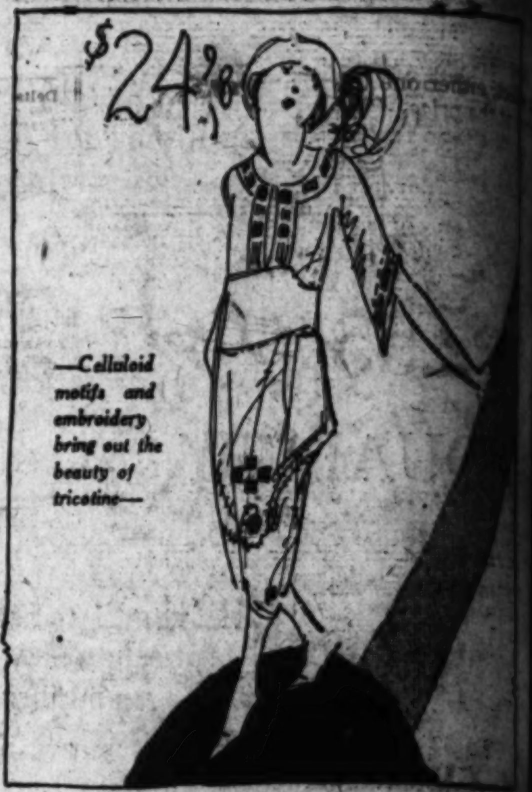
—An embroidered Duvetyne Vestee adds charm to tricotine!



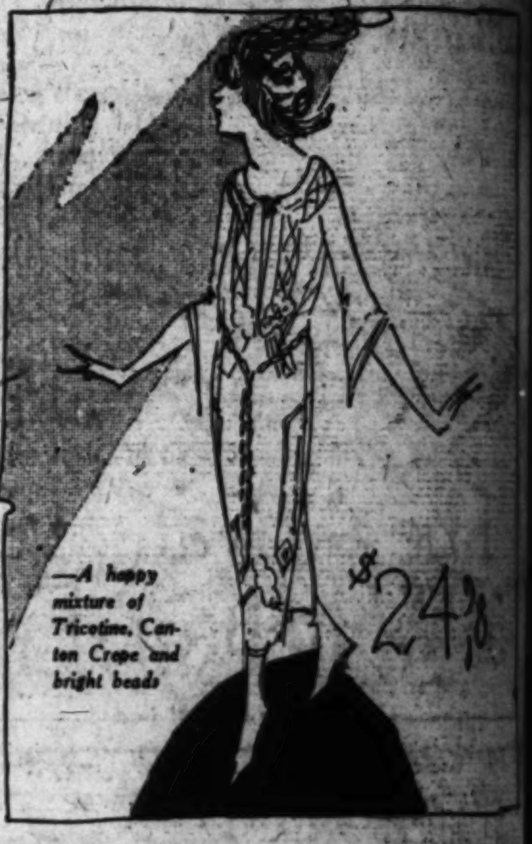
—Tricotine immersed in Silk Ric-Rac.

—Coal black Canton Crepe touched with color.

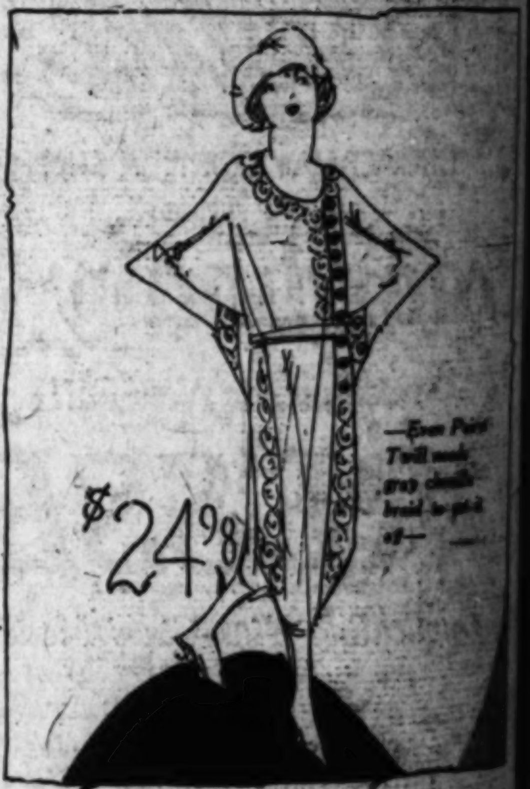
—Another black Canton Crepe with paneled skirt.



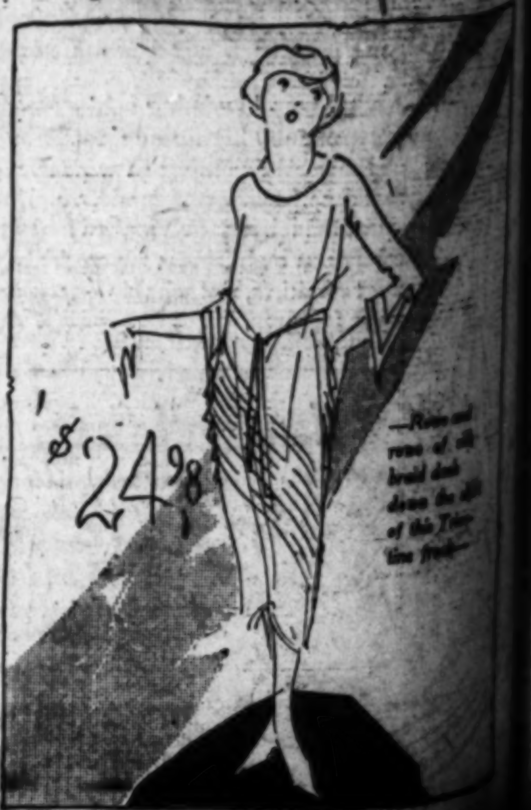
—Celluloid motifs and embroidery bring out the beauty of tricotine—



—A happy mixture of Tricotine, Canton Crepe and bright beads



—Even Poiret Twill needs gray chenille braid to pick it up—



—Rows and rows of silk braid dash down the sides of this Tricotine frock—

Just a Word About the Dresses!

—It is quite natural, when such an extraordinary purchase as this has been made, that the unusualness of the values should cause even such important things as materials, colorings and trimmings to be entirely overlooked—and so it happened that the upper panel which was to carry all the sale talk, was filled, and not a word said about details—

—Such things couldn't be omitted and so this space, that was designed to carry still more pictures, was appropriated—

—Now read on—

—Canton crepes there are a plenty—Satins and tricotines and the favorite of favorites—Poiret twills—some quite plain—some elaborately beaded—some richly braided and some effectively trimmed with contrasting fabrics—

—As you would expect—navy blues and blacks predominate, but enough of them carry touches of color so that you will find many that are strikingly individual.

—The sale opens Monday at 9 o'clock—We urge early morning buying—3rd Floor South!

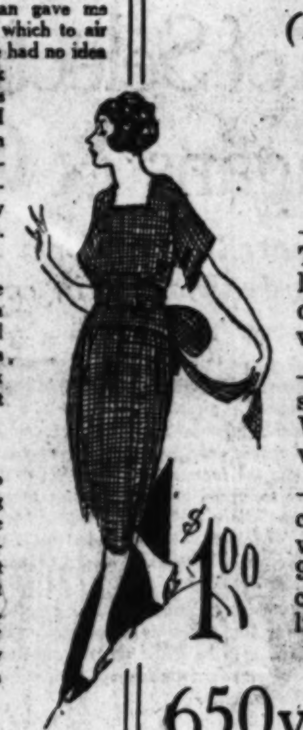
What a man thinks about Femininities



—When the ad-man gave me this little column in which to air my views, I know he had no idea that I'd use it to talk about House Dresses—and I suppose I am going to have an argument, but whether or not—I am going to have my say about House Dresses.

—For the life of me I can't see why a woman should doll all up when she's down town and look like all "get out" at home—

—I went down to do a little investigating among the house frocks and after seeing what really smart affairs are here at next to nothing prices, I'm more than ever at a loss to know why Mother Hubbard is allowed to live.

—Right now there seems to be a craze for CHECKS and I happened to see some mighty pretty ones like the picture, that are going to be sold Monday at $1,00.

—Better not all try to do your buying at the last minute.

—And while I'm on the subject (and have my courage up) let's talk about figures.

—Why?—oh, why will women try to go without corsets? I'm sure they wouldn't if they could just use my eyes once.

—And anyway, why should they go without corsets when really good ones of dainty pink—what do you call it?—oh, yes, broche, can be bought for $3.98.

—The head what-you-call-her (my stenographer tells me it's "Corsetiere") said that these $3.98 corsets are boned with genuine walohn and come in sizes 23 to 28.

—By the way—I can't pass by an opportunity to tell you about some very beautiful dresses I saw them marking for a big sale on Monday at $24.98.

—I took several friends of mine into the marking room to show them these dresses and if I am not mistaken, they'll be here with their noses against the door Monday morning long before nine o'clock.
—There's a great big ad on these dresses on another page.

SYMPHONY
BROADWAY AT 6TH

BIG WEEK

ART THEATERS ACTIVE HERE.

Intellectual Drama Has Very Rosy Future.

Program Indicates Public Appreciation.

Many Altra-Modern Plays in Preparation.

Plans for Egan's Little Theater, the Harlequin, the Hollywood Community Players, the Pasadena Community Theater and other similar organizations in and near Los Angeles, indicate that the coming dramatic season will be a big one for these strongholds of the "intellectual drama."

The programs outlined by these organizations prove better than could anything else how solid is the basis of public appreciation upon which this type of drama is being built in this vicinity. They are also in many cases most encouraging signs for the future. The theaters show a breadth of taste, courage in undertaking difficult or new productions and a devotion to art for its own sake that will doubtless bear fruit.

It is in these smaller theaters that much of our long-hoped-for American drama is now actually being created. The manner of its creation, the spirit of the movement, speaks loudly for the quality of the thing which will be produced.

As regards American drama, Frank Egan, impresario of the Little Theater, is now planning as two of his biggest productions a pair of plays by Thomas P. Robinson, "The Rebound" and "The Copy." Both of these were Harvard prize plays, and both are thoroughly American and modern.

In "The Rebound" Mr. Egan expects to star John Davidson and in "The Copy" Henrietta Crossman. He is also planning to present Will Rogers in "David Harum," a role which should be peculiarly suited to this whimsical comedian.

For the more spectacular side of his season's offering, Mr. Egan intends to bring to Los Angeles Olga Gray Zacsek, who is now in Detroit working on a series of musical productions in conjunction with the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Among other productions in which he will feature Miss Zacsek, Mr. Egan mentions "Thy Name is Woman," played last year at the Mason with Mary Nash, and "The Riddle Woman," by Charlotte E. Wells.

Mr. Egan is also considering "The Jest," which had such a long run in New York with the Barrymores, as a vehicle for Maude Hannaford, besides three plays by Mark Swan and a psychology drama called "The Eighth Day," for Lela Covington.

THE HARLEQUIN.

Suderman's "Roses," Lord Dunsany's "A Night in a Inn" and "Barbara," a clever comedy by Kenneth Sawyer Goodman, are the selections of Mrs. R. D. Shephard for the opening program at the Harlequin Theater, Ambassador Hotel, the evening of November 7.

Mrs. Shephard, the director-general of the theater, first planned to put on Shaw's "How He Lied to Her Husband," as the third play, but finding too close a resemblance in lines and plot between it and the Dunsany play, she thought it best to select one of totally different character, and chose "Barbara."

The cast for these plays will not be known for another week, as Mrs. Shephard wishes to make sure that no changes need be made in her personnel before announcing.

Nor is the program for the season definitely arranged as yet. But the whole attitude of Mrs. Shephard and the Harlequin people toward their work indicate that their twenty-six weeks of repertoire will be well filled with dramatic events.

The first western production of Shaw's "Fanny's First Play," will begin at the Hollywood Community Theater Monday a week, continuing for the usual run of two weeks. This is Neely Dickson's third Shaw offering, the other two having "How Song, Dance and Fun Menu at Orpheum.

Bushman and Bayne, in their clever play, "Poor Rich Man," will hold over at the Orpheum for another week, and they, togther with the incoming acts, will make up a lively bill.

George McKay and Ottie Ardine will present a high-speed dancing act called "All in Fun," which describes it perfectly, though Ottie's costumes are also said to deserve special mention.

Franker Wood and Bunee Wyde bring a travesty called "All Right Eddy," a series of disconnected episodes ranging in time from the Stone Age to the present, each bit complete in itself with its own songs, steps and business, and with clever costumes and effects.

Bob Caleton and Julia Ballew call their turn "A Feast for Fashionable Fancies," and it is just that—songs, dances, clothes and smart sayings.

Neal Abel, the man with the mobile face, tells negro stories and illustrates them with contortions coantinance.

The Bennet sisters, as Seaside Belles, show well in their athletic fun-making; the Juggling Nelsons trundle hoops in an eccentric fashion, and the Quixey Four hold over from last week.

Africa Makes New Setting for Film Play.

"Under the Lash," a photoplay featuring Gloria Swanson in a novel role—that of the wife of a Boer of the South African veldt—will open at Grauman's tomorrow. The drama centers around the struggle of a young wife against the ironclad traditions of her husband and his family's and the strength of the story together with its real sweetness makes it an ideal one for Miss Swanson. The setting is rather new to the photoplay world, and is said to be unusually picturesque.

The story is an adaptation by J. E. Nash from "The Shulamite" by Edward Knoblock, that in turn having been taken from the novel of the same name by Claud and Alice Askew.

Sam Wood, who has made other pictures of Miss Swanson's, directed this production.

The photography is by Al Gilks. In the cast are also Mahlon Hamilton, Russell Simpson, Lillian Leighton, Lincoln Steadman, Thenax Jasper and Clarence Ford.

Accompanying "Under the Lash," will be an atmospheric prologue and special music. Henry Murtagh at the Wurlitzer will play Gottschalk's "Last Hope," and other selections.

"Three-Word Brand' with William S. Hart, will show today for the last time.

"A Little Cafe" Will Twinkle at Pantages.

Twenty minutes of diversion in Greenwich Village devoted to love, laughter and lingerie, so they say, will headline the New Pantages bill next week. The title of the frivolity is "A Little Cafe." Baby Dorothy Olive, juvenile comedienne, is featured.

Lew Wilson brings the first offerings of the 1922 crop of jokes and stories. Little Pipifax, the kiddies' friend, offers "Fun on the Beach," in acrobatic pantomime.

"Stateroom 19," a nautical travesty with waves of laughter, introduces McLain Gates and Genevieve Lee, newly-weds on a transatlantic honeymoon. Gilbert and Saul, specialists on violin and piano accordeon, interweave music, jazz and comedy.

"The Inner Chamber," Alice Joyce's recent Vitagraph production, said to be more sensational than her former pictures, is to show. The story starts out with the discovery by a newly-wedded bride beaten into insensibility by unknown enemies of her husband within an hour of the wedding. The mystery element runs through the picture, based on Dobie's novel, "The Blood Red Dawn."

"AFFAIRS OF ANATOL" CONTINUES ITS RUN.

With four weeks of success to its credit, Cecil B. De Mille's "The Affairs of Anatol" continues to show at Grauman's Rialto Theater. How much longer this popular photoplay will run has not yet been definitely announced, but other pictures are on hand which call for presentation.

Features of the "Affairs" are the rooms of Satan Synne, called "the wickedest woman in New York;" Wallace Reid's acting with the woman who tries to steal his heart; the gowns worn by Gloria Swanson, Wanda Hawley and Bebe Daniels, who plays Satan Synne; and the character acting of Theodore Roberts and Haymond Hatton.

In addition to "The Affairs of Anatol" the program includes solos by Herbert Burland at the Wurlitzer, several film novelties, and an interpretive musical score arranged by Mischa Guterson and played by the Rialto orchestra.

"Speed Girl" is Really to Speed at the Kinema.

Every kind of speed—on a sidewalk scooter, on horseback, in fast motor cars, in fast planes—is used to illustrate the theme of Bebe Daniels's picture, "The Speed Girl," by Elmer Harris, which will be given its premiere at the Kinema Theater today.

Brought up as an outdoor girl, and dedicated from early youth to the business of entertaining the public, Miss Daniels was taught to ride, to drive a car, to shoot and fish and play at every sort of sport.

In "The Speed Girl" action and suspense, it is said, fill the story. In Miss Daniels's support is Walter Hiers, rotund cheer-bringer.

A feature of importance on the program is the first of the Darkest Africa Jungle pictures in the Vandenburgh Expedition series. It is titled "Jungle Dancers," and is a two-reel subject dealing with the wild men and women in a land rarely trodden by white man.

Another feature, a Mermaid-Jack White comedy, is "For Land's Sake."

Ernest Belcher is to present Lena Baskette in "The Dance of the Fan," a stage illusion, while the Kinema orchestra, under Rene Williams, will supply the music program.

"MUSKETEERS" HIGH IN POPULARITY.

More than eight weeks of popularity seems to be the manner in which Los Angeles is greeting Douglas Fairbanks's "The Three Musketeers," now at the Mission Theater. The production, hailed as one of the great cinema achievements of the year, is a depiction of Dumas's immortal story in which Doug has outshone even his own radiance.

Throughout the United States recently the picture has entered on lengthy runs in the largest playhouses. Undoubtedly Fairbanks, who originally set out to make of "The Three Musketeers" a picture to eclipse all his previous films, has met with success in his aim.

The dramatization of the Dumas story was in the hands of Edward Knoblock, the playwright, and its directions under Fred Niblo. A cast including Mary MacLaren, Marguerite De la Motte, Barbara La Mar, Nigel De Brulier, Lon Poff, George Seigmann and others support the star.

The presentation, under the guidance of Managing Director Harry David of the Mission, is well embellished with musical numbers by Dr. Carlos De Mandil and others.

"HAPPINESS" STILL CHARMS AT MOROSCO.

"Happiness" will enter the fourth week with today's matinee at the Morosco Theater. It is playing to capacity houses and making an altogether fine impression.

Bessie Eyton and Gayne Whitman, in the principal roles, do a great deal toward the success of the little comedy. Whitman, as an inventive Irishman, proves rather irresistible. Miss Eyton is achieving distinct popularity. Helene Sullivan and William Austin, give splendid support.

Miss Vivienne La Rue, Estelle Allen, Joseph Eggenton, and Charles Buck appear to advantage.

One of the features is the appearance of two small children in the last act. Their work is devoid of the staginess.

"MY LADY FRIENDS" IS HAVING CAPITAL RUN.

Playing to crowded houses since the opening performance "My Lady Friends" will begin the fourth week of its run at the Majestic Theater, with the matinee today.

The play has firmly established itself as one of the hits of the local theatrical season.

Edward Everett Horton, as James Smith, the millionaire Bible publisher, with an old-fashioned, thrifty wife, but surrounded with a number of lady friends, keeps his audience thoroughly amused. Mary Newcomb plays a serious role with sincerity. One of the outstanding features is the duet, sung by Horton and Sara Sothern.

The cast also includes Marie Curtis, Franklin Pangborn, Stanley Taylor, Caroline Rankin, Lela Bliss, Christine Mayo and Dorothy Wetmore.

MANY STORIES FOR "U" STARS.

"That Lass of Lowries" Soon to Have Revival.

Thalberg Writes One for Marie Prevost.

Popular Song to Supply Gladys Walton Theme.

Shopping for good plays for Universal stars is what Irving G. Thalberg is busily doing, these days. Announcement has just been made of the purchase of a number of stories.

Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "That Lass o' Lowrie's," will see the silver light again. Seven years ago it was a five-reel sensation.

Universal made it with Harry Carey and Helen Ware in the leads, supported by Ella Hall, Harry Carter and Jack Curtis. Robert Leonard directed.

Now Lucien Hubbard, scenario editor, states that the story has been prepared as a vehicle for Priscilla Dean, and is to be given an elaborate production. Elliott J. Clawson is writing the continuity. Miss Dean is at present completing Cynthia Stockley's "Wild Honey."

"Mallory Campeador," a Saturday Evening Post story by R. G. Dirk, has been selected as the next vehicle for Herbert Rawlinson, to follow "Barry Gordon," in production. George Hively will write the scenario.

Episodes of construction camp life, reclamation projects and the work of making the old earth habitable, are contained in the romantic story of a young civil engineer. Another story bought for Rawlinson is "The Black Bag," by Louis Joseph Vance, a working script of which is being prepared.

An original story by Drago, entitled "Out of the Silent North," has been accepted by Mr. Hubbard after consultation with Mr. Thalberg. It will be used as a plot for a Frank Mayo picture, after a scenario by George C. Hull.

Mr. Thalberg himself has definitely entered the literary class. He has written an original story for Marie Prevost around the promising title of "The Frisky Flapper."

Gerald Duffy is working on the scenario from which King Baggot will produce the Universal film version of Hal Reid's famous old play, "Human Hearts." This special attraction will be presented with an all-star cast.

"Second-Hand Rose" has jazzed its way into the hearts of Americans to such an extent that Mr. Thalberg and Mr. Hubbard considered it fine meat for Gladys Walton. William Younger is preparing the scenario.

Two stories have been purchased for Hoot Gibson. One is "Sou'west," a magazine story by F. R. Buckley. The other is an original full of thrills by Harvey, Gates entitled "Headin' West."

"Kind Deeds" is the name of a story purchased in New York recently, which probably will be used for Miss Walton. William Flavens McNutt wrote it, and Wallace Clifton will do the scenario.

Children to Stage Own Spook Play.

A Halloween play, in which figure goblins, spooks and everything boys and girls connect with this season, will be staged at the Children's Community Theater, Normal Hill Center, Friday evening and Saturday afternoon.

The Children's Community Theater is a branch of the Los Angeles Community Service and Drama League; the Board of Education sanctions the work; the plays are announced in the schools; and the Public Library gives its hearty support. All the parts in these plays are taken by the children.

Rehearsals are now going on for two one-act plays by the senior children's group. They are "Sir David Wears a Crown," by Stuart Walker, and "The Heart of Pierrot."

SCOTCH FLAVOR TELLS.

Katherine MacDonald Has Many Requests for Recipes.

Just because Katherine MacDonald has a name suggestive of bonnie heather, she seems to be regarded by motion-picture fans as a Scotch edition of the Encyclopedia Brittanica. For foolish questions her daily mail wins the celluloid gasoline tank. Among various letters received are demands for patterns for Scotch kilties, desires for recipes to make Haig and Haig or Johnnie Walker as "home brew" in a bungalow, requests from small town fire departments for donations of bagpipes for their band for old home week, and a hundred other things identified with the land that Miss MacDonald and Harry Lauder are making famous.

HAROLD LLOYD CAUSES INCURABLE EPIDEMIC.

Patrons of the De Luxe Theater who wish to become infected with Harold Lloyd-itis may do so today or tomorrow. His latest Associated Exhibitor's comedy, "I Do," will be shown there.

The first symptom of the disease is a breaking out of smiles; then come chuckles, laughs and finally roars.

When this last stage is reached, the victim is beyond help. He then becomes addicted to copious conversation on the subject of Lloyd's latest comedy.

He is overpowered by a desire to "tell the world." He is sometimes found arguing whether or not Lloyd's famous spectacles have lenses in them.

It is all very pathetic if you have not yet caught it. But the sufferer never takes medicine. He knows he is incurable and glories in it.

NEW SCHOOL OF DANCING.

An attractive new school of dancing has recently been opened in Hollywood at 1635 La Brea avenue by Mme. Orrea Woska, late of the Casino de Paris and one-time professor in L'Academie des Maitres de Danse. Classes in Russian, ballet, toe and classical dancing will be given daily. Mme. Woska is also planning to give an exhibition of her work Friday of each week.

BRIGHT SHAW PLAY.

"Fanny's First Play," is one of the brightest of the Shaw comedies, vigorous and witty, but lacking much of the ironical impudence which has made some think Shaw more reformer than playwright. Hence it should appeal alike to those who love the clever Irishman per se, and those who go to the theater for entertainment rather than instruction.

In "Fanny's First Play," Roy Atwell will play Juggins, the unusual butler; Wheeler Dryden has the role of Bobby. Thomas Ricketts, who has had over forty years of stage experience, and who played in picture recently with Clara Kimball Young, takes the part of the count, and Helen Jerome Eddy will appear as Fanny.

The Pasadena Community Players got under way last week for their fifth season with "Little Women," an adaptation by Marion De Forest of Louisa M. Alcott's famous story. They have adopted for the season the most ambitious program they have yet attempted.

Heretofore they have limited themselves to nine productions in the year, but this season their schedule calls for sixteen full-length plays, each to be given from seven to eleven times. To be able to carry out this enlarged program, Gilmor Brown, producing director, has been provided with two assistants—Eloise Sterling and Ruth Bolgiano.

THEIR REPERTOIRE.

A partial list of the season's productions follows: "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," by Frances Hodgson Burnett; "Things That Count," by Lawrence Eyre; Shakespeare's "King Lear," Clare Kummer's "Good Gracious Annabelle," Stevenson's "Treasure Island," Galsworthy's "Strife" and Montague Glass's "Potash and Perlmutter in Society."

In addition to this list there will be six special productions. The first of these, to show in December, is "Will of Bishopgate" by Alfred Brand of Pasadena.

This play won an honorable mention in last year's drama league contest, and is interesting, moreover, because Will of Bishopgate is none other than Will Shakespeare.

Other specials are "His House in Order," by Pinero; Maeterlinck's "Sister Beatrice," Edna Ferber's "Twelve Hundred a Year," and a program of notable one-acters.

Of the newer organizations for the production of good plays in an artistic manner, a notable one is the Co-operative Repertory Theater Association of Los Angeles, which is being promoted by Harl McInroy, an Oxford man and actor-playwright, late of the Birmingham Repertory Theater and the Scottish Repertory Players. This association is planning to open a repertory theater downtown in Los Angeles, where every one may come to see worth-while productions at reasonable prices.

Although their association is not yet fully organized, Mr. McInroy and some of his people have already put on two one-act plays in Los Angeles, "The Flower of the Desert," and "Honorable Togo," at the Ebell clubhouse last Monday.

The Mummers' Workshop in Hollywood will continue this year their ultra-modern activities, designing and making their own costumes and sets, and showing in their transfigured barn-playhouse the most original and often the most bizarre of the new plays.

The Mummers are not yet ready to disclose the nature of their activities to the public, but those who know their work of previous years will not expect these to be banal.

Finally there are the Playcrafters, a local organization with affiliations in the Laguna Beach art colony, whose purpose, like that of the Mummers, is to build plays from the ground up, writing, criticizing and producing their own ideas in dramatic forms as unconventional as possible.

Jack Hoxie,
Who will be seen in "Dead or Alive," picture feature, at the Hippodrome.

"DEAD OR ALIVE" IS HEADLINER AT HIP.

For three days beginning today the Hippodrome Theater will offer as its cinema feature Jack Hoxie's latest western picture, "Dead or Alive," which gets its title from two men changing the name on the headstone of a grave.

Brindamour, "world-famous escape artist," presents a spectacle novelty.

Avis Bennett and George Lee are reputedly funny and entertaining in "Vodvil Etiquette."

A playlet called "Women" is the offering of Pauline Eckhart and company. Lawrence Johnson, a ventriloquist, and Maurice and Girl in "The Unexpected" complete the program.

WILL ROGERS STILL KEEPS FANS LAUGHING

Lessons in the art of making love according to the standard set by such "movie" heroes as Doug, Bill Hart, Tom Mix and "Bull" Montana, are burlesqued in Will Rogers's comedy, "Doubling For Romeo," which is now entering its third week at Miller's Theater. The cowboy hero gives his friends a lot of free advertising, but this serves his purpose of making his audience laugh.

The latest Rogers picture was written by Elmer Rice and directed by Clarence Badger. With Sylvia Breamer as the girl to be won, after he has learned the art of making love at a movie studio, Will Rogers does his comic best to upset the tradition of Romeo as a lover.

The titles which were written by Rogers himself, are said to be funny enough to make up a vaudeville act and Rogers's remarks, which precede the showing, put the audience in the smiling mood.

"Oh, Buddy," a special Christie comedy with Neal Burns, Vera Steadman and other Christie favorites is another laugh producer on this all fun bill.

DANCE POTPOURRI AT CINDERELLA.

Martha Belfort and Pedro Valdez, dancers from the National Theater at Mexico City, will open at the Cinderella Roof, Monday, in an interpretation of the wild Apache dance of the Paris underworld. This rendition of the French dance has created no little sensation among theatergoers, it is said, of the Mexican capital.

Pedro Valdez will also give a solo number, the Gypsy Dance, a Mexican interpretation that mingles Asiatic motif with the castanets of the southern republic.

Miss Belfort is a native of France and a star pupil of Valdez, and has appeared with him in a long engagement of the Apache number below the border.

USEFUL INVENTIONS.

A radium application is said to have made plants burst out into bud during the dormant season.

A pitchfork with removable tines which can be replaced if broken has been patented by a Canadian inventor.

For theatrical performers an inventor has patented a device to enable them to run races on tight ropes, which pass over spools that record the distances covered.

The instrument known as the radiomicrometer is so sensitive that it will measure the heat from a hand held thirty feet away from it and will record the heat given off by a fixed star so remote that light from it, traveling at a speed of 186,000 miles a second, takes many years to reach us.

An electrically-operated machine invented by a Mexican casts lead seals for freight cars, express packages and mail bags at a rate of 1000 an hour.

An Australian has discovered a method for using fiber obtained from the bark of a large variety of eucalyptus trees in the manufacture of twine, rope and bagging.

Successful experiments have been made in extracting alcohol from lava and peat.

A coin-in-a-slot machine has been invented by an Englishman to enable a passenger to learn at what speed he is traveling in a train.

A Frenchman has invented methods for enlarging and reducing phonograph records to obtain increased or diminished sound intensity.

A live-saving buoy invented in Europe is hammock shaped and large enough for a man to lie in and propel himself through the water with a paddle.

A new gas is to take the place of acetylene in blowpipe work has been produced in America. It is called calorene, and is said to have a thermal value of 1580 British thermal units to the cubic foot. The composition is 86 per cent carbon and 14 per cent hydrogen, and as the gas can be safely stored in unpacked cylinders at a pressure of 3500 pounds to the square inch, a considerable saving in weight can be effected. The maximum temperature obtainable is put at 6200 degrees Fahrenheit.

A lawn mower that will successfully cut the grass on the incline of a terrace and that will not require its operator to pull it up and down, nor run up and down the grass bank himself, is described in Popular Mechanics Magazine. In construction the new device does not differ greatly from the old-style lawn mower. Instead of the stationary handle, the new machine has a pivoted handle set on a toothed quadrant. By lifting a stop pin from between the teeth of the quadrant, and setting it to the desired point, the mower is brought into an angular position relative to the operator, so that he can cut a lengthwise swath on the slope without leaving the ground level.

A Monastery Wine Mystery.

Mystery surrounds an old monastery near South Lee Farm, Datchet. The greater part was pulled down some years ago and fire destroyed a good deal of the remainder. There are several deep wells, and it is said that at the bottom of one there are 3000 bottles of wine placed there by monks, but an attempt to find them has failed. Under the ruins are a large number of earthenware bottles of quaint pattern, and there is a legend that a subway leads from the monastery to Burnham Abbey.—[London Daily Mail.

"Salvation Nell" to Show at Alhambra.

Edward Sheldon's "Salvation Nell," immortalized on the stage by Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, comes to the screen at the Alhambra Theater today.

An absorbing and dramatic romance of life in the tenements of New York "Salvation Nell" deals with the ups and downs of a poor little girl, whose pluck asserts itself after she has been dismissed from her position of—scrubwoman. Her beloved Jim had gone the road of least resistance and was lost, as far as standing in the community was converned. Nell joins the Salvation Army and triumphs, saving her Jim from himself.

Amidst the dives and tenements of the lower New York East Side Nell works for the "weal" not only of her own Jim, but humanity as well.

Pauline Starke is said to be an ideal Nell. Wistful and tenderly appealing, the little actress gives a vivid portrayal of the slum worker, with a romance bearing her onward in her fight.

As extra added feature there will be Larry Semon's comedy, "The Bellhop."

WANT TO GET WAGES.

French Servants Seek to Abolish Tip System and Substitute Wages.

French waiters again are trying to dispense with tips. At the coming congress of the National Association of Hotel Employees the total suppression of the tipping system is to be demanded again. Foreigners seldom realize that the irritating activities of a French servant in search of a tip are the result of a situation which forces such action on the servant. One might think that to abolish tips the servants might better simply turn their back on them than to hold a congress about it. But the matter is not so simple.

In most French restaurants the waiters get no salaries at all. On the contrary, they have to pay for the privilege of working and have no source of income but their tips. Even in the cheap chain restaurants run by Alexander Duval (the nearest equivalent to Childs in America) the waitresses have to pay two francs fifty a day for their jobs. Ushers in theaters pay for being allowed to usher. In resisting the abolition of the tipping system hotel managers aver that it leads to bad service if the servants are sure of their pay. Guests complain at the 10 per cent addition to their bills, and the manager has to bear the onus of collecting instead of passing it on to the help. At the moment a transition is in process—many hotels charge the 10 per cent for service and the help collect their tips as well.—[Brooklyn Eagle.

WHEN FATHER GREW UP.

Johnny had eaten the soft portions of his toast at breakfast and piled the crusts on his plate.

"When I was a little boy," remarked his father. "I always ate the crusts of my toast."

"Did you like them?" asked Johnny, cheerfully.

"Yes," replied his father.

"You may have these, then," said Johnny, pushing his plate across the table.—[Epworth Herald.

TOLD ITSELF.

"The prisoner refuses to give his occupation," said the police sergeant to the bench.

"Why don't you say what you are?" asked the magistrate of the man in the dock.

"'Cos it's superfluous, ain't it?" was the reply.

"I don't understand you," said the magistrate.

"No?" said the prisoner, with elevated eyebrows. "Then you're as dull as the police themselves, if you'll excuse me saying so, sir. What's the charge against me?"

"Stealing two chairs and a table," answered the police sergeant.

"There you are," replied the cheerful prisoner. "I'm a furniture remover, ain't I?"—[London Answers.

Dark Art in Setting of Gayety.

Beginning tomorrow night, the Philharmonic Auditorium makes a decided change in the type of its entertainment by presenting on the Pacific Coast the Harvey Minstrel Show, which for forty-eight years has been successfully touring the East and South.

Chick Beeman, who will be remembered for his clever comedy work with the Georgia Minstrels last year, will be here with the Harvey show, together with forty-nine other singers, dancers and musicians, and an octoroon chorus of dusky beauties. Harvey's Minstrels are said to be one of the best costumed shows of the type.

Fifteen vaudeville acts with daily street parades and a concert before the Auditorium will make up the additional program.

LLOYD FILM STILL MERRY ATTRACTION.

Still running high in popularity, Harold Lloyd's thrill comedy "Never Weaken" is to be held over for another week at the Symphony Theater.

Lloyd's style and methods are peculiarly his own and his antics on a steel girder 400 feet above the sidewalk are breath-taking.

Due to a mishap to the film the Thomas Santschi western which was being shown at the Symphony in conjunction with the Lloyd production has given way to a Holman Day production made in the Maine woods and called "Brother to the Bear." A remarkable animal, Pedro the bear, has one of the principal parts.

ROMANCE OF DEEP SEA IN MEIGHAN FILM.

"Cappy Ricks" at the Garrick Theater this week will be full of thrills, as might be expected of a combination of the broad blue sea and Thomas Meighan.

The story deals with the fortunes of one Matt Peasley, descendant of a long line of New England seamen, played by Thomas Meighan, who lands in San Francisco after a long voyage, and eventually ships out again as mate on one of the freighters of the Blue Star Line. The brains and soul of the Blue Star Line are Cappy Ricks, one-time sea dog, and now financier and ship owner.

Cappy Ricks has a daughter whom he loves, if possible, even more than his ships. Under romantic conditions Matt meets this daughter and proves himself a hero in her eyes.

Thereafter while sailing in the South Seas the captain is killed by savages; Matt takes command after a lively battle, and finally brings the ship home safe to San Francisco. Then Cappy's daughter, Florrie, announces that she and Matt are in love.

But Cappy has other plans for her future, in which figure Skinner, an official in the Blue Star Line. To further these plans he takes Florrie and Skinner on a cruise up the Pacific Coast. Some time later news comes to San Francisco by wireless that their boat is foundering on a dangerous reef.

Matt sets out to rescue them in a harbor tug, and his success gives Cappy Ricks a new idea of his ability. The story ends with the engagement of Matt and Florrie.

The supporting cast includes Agnes Ayres as Florrie and Charles Abbe as Cappy Ricks.

Mayor Clarke of Portland, Me., received a complaint from a resident that the garbage man had not stopped at the complainant's house for some time. The Mayor sent a limousine after the garbage and it was removed within thirty minutes.

BUSHMANS EN FAMILLE.

hoisted it, to both his own and the stage hands' delight.

Down came Richard to his nurse's arms. Nurse had been out mailing a letter. He was dusted off and his hands washed.

Richard was himself again.

We went on talking, the Bushmans and I, of various things. Of their friendship with Richard Mantell and his wife, and of how Mrs. Bushman looks so much like Mrs. Mantell, known to the stage as Genevieve Hamper, that, when Mr. Mantell first met her, he stepped back, exclaiming quite dramatically, "My gawd!"

And of how the Bushmans expect to go to Europe in a year or two. And of how they have been asked to do a scene from "Romeo and Juliet" in vaudeville.

And of how little Richard seems always to realize about the traditions of the stage and to mind them, except the time his big dog, the Great Dane, called appropriately Hamlet, was taken sick and Richard, in a tense moment of silence on the stage during his parents' act, called in a loud, anxious stage whisper to them from the wings, "Muvver, if Hamlet dies will he go to the dog heaven?" which convulsed the first two rows out front.

"Why," said Mrs. Bushman, "that child does say the profoundest things sometimes. He—"

A noise came up from the stage. It wasn't like the noise that Sammy Lee and his lady friends make in dancing, either. It had a distinctly if subtly alarming note about it. It brought everybody out of their dressing-room.

"Where's Richard?" His nurse was looking all about for him.

Actors rushed about, including Mr. and Mrs. Bushman, stage hands flew downstairs, the nurse was disconsolate. Mrs. Bushman felt sure he was kidnaped, but Mr. Bushman looked sternly at his hairbrush before dashing out to join the search.

Suddenly somebody noted a commotion below stairs. The barking of Gautier's dogs was mingled with sounds of small boy glee. Everybody rushed headlong into the catacombs below stairs. Sure enough there was Richard, having the time of his young life with the dogs in the big room where the animals are kept—the "dog suite," they call it backstage.

Most grown people would hesitate to invade that place, for performing dogs are temperamental. But small Richard isn't afraid of anything.

"See, see, muvver!" he exclaimed absorbed.

A bunch of dogs were gathered around a small, yellow something which turned out to be a forlorn little ki-yi that had somehow strayed from the alley into the place, lured by the sounds of his own kind, I suppose, and Richard had suddenly had an inspiration to have him join the educated pups.

Out from the retreat were snatched Richard and the ki-yi.

Once more Mr. Bushman looked at the hairbrush. But Mamma Bushman took it firmly out of his reach.

On being settled once more, I asked, "Is Richard going to be an actor?"

But it was almost time for the Bushmans' act, so they left little Richard to prove to me whether he was or not.

He recited his nursery rhymes, and while this is usually a form of entertaiment one side-steps, small Richard really is different.

I found myself quite absorbed at the terrific drama he drew into the affairs of old Mother Hubbard and her boneless pup, and Charlie Chaplin had nothing on Richard when he illustrated the didoes of the cat and the fiddle and the athletic bovine that hopped over the moon.

Yes, I decided, let the chips fall where they may, young Richard will be an actor.

Just to start his career off right, he's going to make his very first public appearance tomorrow afternoon, with his parents, on the Orpheum stage, following "The Poor Rich Man."

Whether he makes a speech on that occasion is, I understand, completely up to him.

In any case, he's sure to make a big hit, the dear little ang—

Well, I don't know, on second thoughts; I don't believe I'd call him that!

MORALITY CLAUSES WORK BOTH WAYS.

A morality clause guaranteeing Universal against any immoral act on the part of a player—that is any act which would prejudice the public against pictures in which that player appears—has been inserted in every contract between that company and its artists of late. But Harry Carey is going the company one better, it would appear. In return for permitting the insertion of such a clause in his contract, he demands that his employers also put in one protecting his name against immorality and public prejudice.

"I will not play in any picture depicting scenes which would tend to corrupt the morals of growing children or any other film fans," said Carey yesterday.

"I am perfectly willing to sign a contract that my personal behavior will be beyond criticism, but I will not sign such a contract unless I am guaranteed that I will not be compelled to appear in pictures containing salacious action or suggestive bedroom scenes. In other words, the characters and scenes in my pictures must be as moral as my employers expect me to be.

"The sole excuse for the propaganda now being spread for the censorship of films has been a few salacious pictures made in by-gone days. Motion-picture producers are business men and no man with sound business judgment would think of offending his patrons. The producer who makes offensive pictures has the same chance of succeeding in business that a merchant would have if he personally insulted his customers every time they appeared to make a purchase.

"The proper people to censor pictures are the producers themselves, because offensive pictures always involve the loss of tremendous amounts of money. There are a few who would attend them, but the vast majority of fans would avoid seeing pictures put out by a producer whose products are offensive.

"The morality clause now being inserted in contracts of the various players is nothing more nor less than a guarantee to the fan public that the players are helping to maintain the recognized standards of morality and the conventions which have always kept the American home intact.

"By agreeing specifically that I will not be asked to appear in anything offensive to good taste (and I never have been) we are simply giving the American public a double guarantee and at the same time eradicating all excuse for the unreasonable censorship demands which are now being made by a loud-voiced minority."

ITALIAN DRAMA COMING.

The grand opera photoplay, "Rigoletto," which comes to the Philharmonic Auditorium a week from tomorrow night, will show only eight times, owing to the fact that it must give way to the Philharmonic concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The performances scheduled are for Monday evening, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons and evenings, and the Saturday matinee.

"Rigoletto" has long been one of the most popular Italian operas, and the picture, which follows closely the plot of the lyric version, should prove very successful, as much dramatic detail that could never have been shown on the stage has been introducd.

Victor Hugo's novel, "Le Roi s'Amuse," upon which the opera was based, had for its locale, the country about Torino, Italy and here the photoplay was filmed.

Mme. Liana Haid, considered one of the most beautiful women on the Italian stage, takes the part of Gilda. The role of the Duke of Mantua is taken by Signor Guglielmo Bene.

A special feature of the film's showing at the auditorium will be the synchronization of music with the action. A large orchestra and a number of singers will time their numbers with the progress of the story.

and contains a number of clever comedy touches.

Thrills are also provided by Monte Blue and Tommy Dawes, among them being the bull-dogging of a steer which is charging down upon the helpless Rosemary.

The backgrounds have been selected with care, and the lighting and camera work are said to be especially good.

ACTS ROLES ON THE LOT; NOT OUTSIDE.

GLORIA SWANSON SAYS THOSE WHO DO POSE FOR NOTORIETY.

Never carry the mood of a role from the lot into private life—that is a dramatic slogan with Gloria Swanson. She gave an emphatic answer thereby on a moot question among picture actresses.

"I have heard it said of certain actresses," said Miss Swanson, "that they often enter so thoroughly into the spirit of a part as not to be able to shake it off after working hours. But, personally, I doubt it very much.

"It may be ill-natured of me, but I seriously believe that such an attitude is generally a pose, assumed for publicity purposes.

"For instance now," she continued, "at the Rialto where 'Anatol' is playing there's a characterization of a flighty, capricious and jealous bride.

"Farther down Broadway at Mr. Grauman's large theater there's one of a humble and totally wretched woman, caught in a perfect muddle of soul disturbances. On the screen I am both of these women; off the screen I am neither.

"Good gracious, how could I be? If every part I play affected me that way, by this time I wouldn't be anybody at all, but only a collection of other people's ideas.

"No," repeated Miss Swanson, "I don't believe it ever happens that way. Acting seems to me a good deal like reading a story that interests you tremendously. You can get so absorbed in it for the time that you have to be called over and over, and maybe shaken by the shoulder, to be roused from your attention. You enter completely into the spirit of the book. But once disturbed in this fashion, you can pick up your daily affairs just where you left them off. You may want to go back to the story, but all the time you are you and not one of the characters you have been reading about.

"The actress becomes absorbed in her part just as you do in a story. She is merely reading a part, and translating it in terms of an art she loves. But she comes off the lot with her personality just what it was before. If she didn't she would not be an actress but a puppet for the director to jerk about with a string."

Time!

The late Lady Rudolph Churchill—Jenny Jerome, of New York—oftern regretted with a bitter kind of humor, the ravages which the years had wrought in her beauty.

One of Lady Randolph's best mots was uttered at a luncheon at Mrs. George Keppel's, when she looked round a tableful of dyed and painted beauties of the old Edwardian era and observed:

"Time is ungallant—he tells on a woman."—[Exchange.

Tom Moore is Rising Young Irishman.

Tom Moore, Goldwyn's smiling star, has been getting a liberal education the last year, including from the ground-up experience in several standard trades. Fans will remember his performance as a "white wing" or street cleaner in "Hold Your Horses;" his efficient service as a fireman in "Made in Heaven" and not overlooking his honorable discharge of his official duties as an officer of the law in "Officer 666." Now comes the culmination, it is said, of this series of pictures in "From the Ground Up," which opens at the California Theater today.

How the genial Irish favorite progresses to the top floor of a fourteen-story building, from the ditch-digging job on that same structure makes a clever original screen comedy, it is averred. Rupert Hughes is the author.

Helene Chadwick is the heroine, and others in the cast include De Witt C. Jennings, Grace Pike, Hardee Kirkland and Darrel Foss.

In addition to this human interest story, the program also includes a new Christie special comedy called "A Pair of Sexes," featuring Neal Burns, Viora Daniel and a number of other funmakers.

WOMAN 107 YEARS OLD CAN DANCE.

Trips Steps Learned 80 Years Ago as Spry as One a Generation Younger.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

HARTFORD (Ct.) Oct. 22. Mrs. Frieda Katz in her one hundred and seventh year, spry as a woman a generation her junior, danced three old-fashioned dances at a Talmud celebration here and did not appear tired by her exertion. She said the figures of her dances were those she had learned eighty years ago and which were sanctioned by her religious faith.

SALISBURY IN NORTH.

Monroe Salisbury is to be starred in a series of five feature productions by the West Coast Film Company, under the supervision of Isadore Bernstein, at Pacific studios, in San Mateo. He will begin work upon the first of these about November 1. "Ethan of the Mountains," from the pen of James Caldwell, a San Francisco newspaper man, has been selected, its theme being especially adapted to Salisbury's capabilities.

Odd Dickens Characters on the Screen

One of Charles Dickens's greatest works, "Our Mutual Friend," has been transferred to the screen, and will be on view at Clune's Broadway, starting today.

Few if any writers have excelled Dickens in character drawings, and all those quaint picturesque characters who people "Our Mutual Friend" are portrayed with the most delightful fidelity. There is Silas Wegg, the wooden-legged ballad monger, who reads for the confiding Nicodemus Boffin; there is Boffin himself, and his smiling, good-tempered wife; John Harmon, the younger, and Bella Wilfer whom he loves.

Eugene Wrayburn, Mortimer Lightwood, the lawyer; Gaffner Hexam and his daughter, Lizzie; Rogue Riderhood, who lives up to his name—these and other well-remembered characters are made to live again, it is said.

Action, a thread of mystery and a plenitude of romance pervade "Our Mutual Friend."

BENEFIT RECITAL.

Christiaan Timmner, Dutch violinist, and Annie Timmner, 'cellist, with Thyra Ruhland, pianist, will give a benefit performance in Van Nuys this week.

MOVE TO CUT TANGLE OF FILM CENSORSHIP.

LOCAL BODY WOULD SELECT PICTURES SUITABLE FOR CHILDREN.

Out of the battle for and against motion-picture censorship has arisen in Los Angeles a well-defined visual education movement under the auspices of the Board of Education, which seems to promise a move toward reconciliation between the warring factions.

The chief argument for censorship has always been—"protect the children." The chief argument against it, on the part of the producers, has been that it is impossible to make every picture to fit juvenile intelligence, and that consequently, under censorship devised to protect children, hundreds of stories perfectly proper for adult audiences could never be screened at all.

The visal education movement plans to bridge over this dilemma by preparing for parents a selected list of pictures which are specially fitted for children.

"We divide all pictures into three classes," says Miss Loretta Clark, head of this movement in Los Angeles. "Educational and travel films are in one section. The second section includes pictures that do not deal with the eternal triangle or gun play. The third division takes in all pictures which are fit for adult consumption only. In our work we are concerned only with the first two classes."

Already Miss Clark and her associates have 106 productions on their selected list, covering the output of thirteen companies. Lasky, Realart, George Kleine, Metro and United Artists pictures lead in number chosen so far, it is stated.

Besides making this selection of pictures, visual education, as practiced in Los Angeles and elsewhere, is intended to provide films for school use, and to arrange picture programs for outlying districts which do not possess theater facilities.

NELL SHIPMAN'S PLANS.

Nell Shipman, star of "The Woman of God's Country," will make her next production at Pacific studios, in San Mateo, according to General Manager Isadore Bernstein. Special preparations are under way for the housing of the wild animals and tropical birds, which Miss Shipman will use in this picture. Eighty-seven, instead of the conventional fifty-seven varieties, will be sent to San Mateo from the East and turn a corner of the plant into a miniature zoo.

SPECIFIES SPELLING.

Now the authors are becoming temperamental. In the contract which Clarence Budington Kelland, author of the widely read "Scattergood Baines" stories, has signed with Edna Schley, it is specified that the author's middle name, "Budington," must be spelled correctly. And, ever since, linotype operators all over the country have been gratuitously adding an extra "d" to the name. Edna Schley is making a series of two-reel pictures from the Scattergood stories.

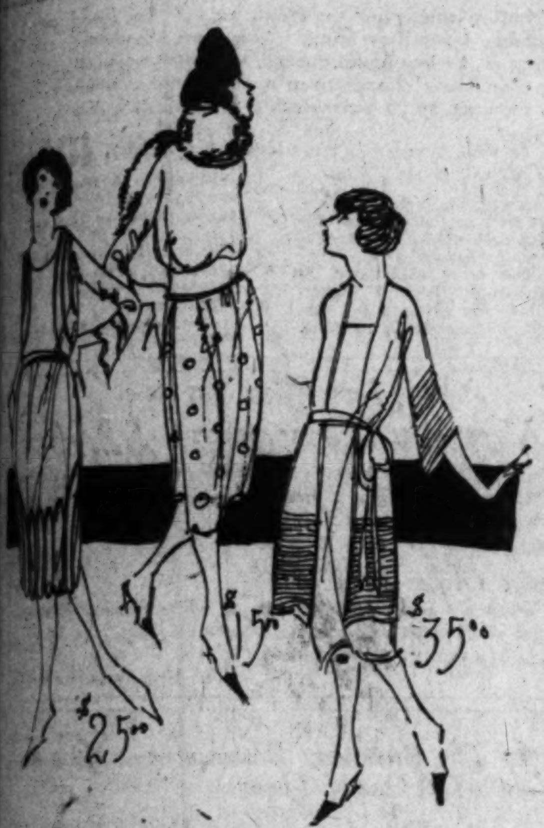
Gravett, the guests all being shrouded in the conventional white worn by ghosts since the first one was discovered in prehistoric times. Whether the Headless Horseman of Sleepy Hollow and Banquo's famous ghost were present, no one knows, as the identity of only a few of the spooks was discovered notwithstanding the fact that a delightful hour was devoted to a guessing contest, Mrs. Phil Burgess winning the prize by identifying seven of the twenty apparitions. Mr. Burgess entertained with some very weird ghost stories and related several personal encounters he had had with spooks. The evening was concluded with a pleasant hour at whist, Mrs. E. Deitrick of Alhambra winning the first prize given ladies and Mrs. Everett Gravett the consolation. Mr. Gravett's skill at the game was a duplicate of Mrs. Gravett's. A short literary and musical program was rendered, including two charming violin numbers by Ronald Collis accompanied by Miss Clara Schaaf, the reading of "Aunt Becky Jones's Visit to her Niece in the City," and "She," by Mrs. E. F. Johannessen, and two pleasing songs, "Sweet Will of God," and "That's Why I Love Him So," by Rev. Mr. Clark. On behalf of the church, J. L. Blake presented Rev. Fortunate Negotiations in the East Have Resulted in This

Purchase of Dresses

Bringing for Your Consideration
Many Beautiful and Unusual

Frocks at $15, $25 and $35



—It was with the definite purpose of presenting for these October days a dress event that would stand out in comparison to ordinary dress events that the garment chief laid his plans for Monday's offering.

—That the plans were successful goes without saying — so you will agree when you see the dresses.

—It's been a long, long time since we've had frocks of such beauty and individual charm to offer at prices so extremely low.

—We miss our guess if this week's offering in dresses should not bring the most liberal response that the Garment Section has seen in a good many months.

—It is difficult to picture to you in words the full importance of this dress purchase. When you see the garments you will be surprised that such beautiful frocks could be sold for $15, $25 and $35.

The Dresses at $15.00

—are models of crepe, satin, jersey and tricotine. Some of them are beaded and embroidered, others are trimmed with ribbon and pretty buttons. Plain tailored and more ornate models are included, as are both long or short waistline effects. There's choice of black, navy, brown and attractive fall shades and sizes 16 to 44.

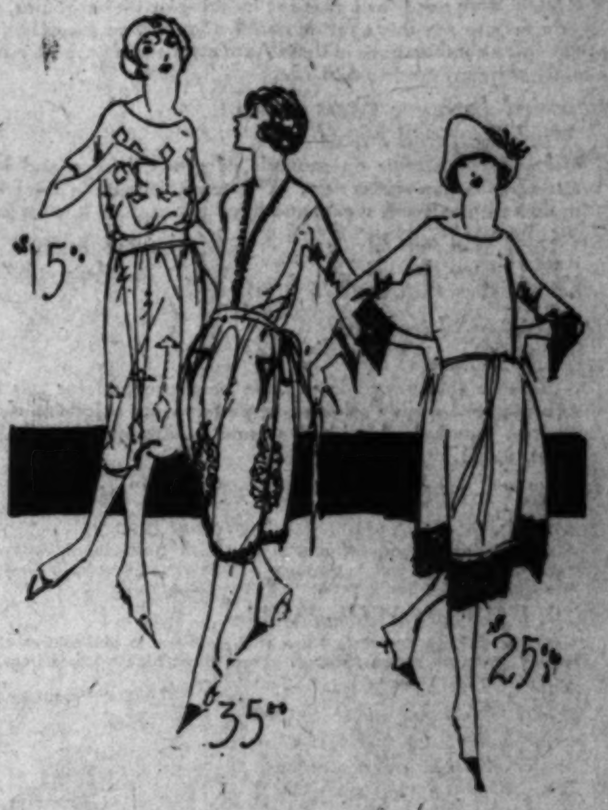
The Dresses at $25.00

—are of Poiret twill, tricotine, jersey, satin, Canton crepe and Georgette. Jet ornaments and bead trimming provide decoration; vest and blouse effects are shown; irregular skirt lengths are noted in some cases. You may choose from black, navy and brown and from sizes 16 to 44.

The Dresses at $35.00

—are of Poiret twill, tricotine, Georgette, lace, satin, Canton crepe and satin crepe. Some of the wool dresses are beautifully tailored, others are more ornate; the lace dresses are suitable for dinner frocks; those of silk are variously designed. In black, navy, brown and other modish colors; sizes 16 to 44.

—The Broadway—Third Floor.



If You're Observing, You've Doubtless Noted That

Low-Heel Footwear
Is Much in Vogue Just Now

—and is, moreover, worn by many women as well as by the growing girls for whom it was originally designed.

—Among the many, many models you'll find at The Broadway developed in a variety of demanded leathers and colorings we mention four especially popular numbers:

Patent Leather "Jazz" Oxfords at $6.00.

—With low, flat heels, plain round toes and flexible leather soles. As comfortable as they are dressy in appearance. A new shipment enables us to offer all sizes, 2½ to 8, widths A to D, at $6.00.

Dark Brown Calf One-Strap Pumps, $6.00

—Very good-looking and splendid for walking as well are these strap pumps with low heels and Goodyear welt soles. The toes are in medium-round shape, and have imitation tips; the single broad strap fastens in two-button style.

Light Tan Calf Ball Strap Oxfords at $6.50

—Made over English lasts and having low heels, fully perforated ball straps and tips.

Stiddles Ko-Rec-Toe Oxfords at $7.00

—These footform shoes are especially adapted for growing girls or professional women who require roomy footwear. They are made of genuine Lotus calfskin of fine, sturdy quality, in a rich mahogany shade; have full round, broad toes and low heels and are well finished inside and out. Moderately priced at $7.00. —The Broadway—Aisle 8.

'A Two Days' Featuring of

Silk and Velvet Costume Materials and Coatings at Lowered Prices

—You'll find listed in this lowered price grouping materials suitable for blouses, hat trimmings, street and afternoon dresses, evening gowns, underwear, suits, coats and wraps. If you've a need in any of these lines, and are considering having the garment made, perhaps you will be attracted by the lowness of the prices which will rule on Monday and Tuesday in respect to the following items:

600 Yards Trico and Plain Duvetyn at $5.45

—Tan, rust, dark brown, navy, bottle green, apricot, delf, jade, poppy, orange colorings as well as black are available in this material which is now so popular for making hats, dress trimmings, capes, etc.

500 Yards Silk Plush at $11.95

—In black, seal and dark taupe, in the 54-inch width that cuts to advantage in the making of coats, capes, etc.; this fabric is also much used for trimmings and stoles.

42-inch Black Silk Velvet at $8.95

—400 yards of this richly finished material.

1200 Yards Imported Jap Pongee at 98c

—Very popular just now for the making of gowns, pajamas and underwear.

Fancy Crepes at $2.45

—1000 yards in street and evening shades. 36-inches wide.

800 Yards Fancy Taffetas at $2.45

—Floral and striped designs in light grounds. Two higher-priced lines in this offering.

800 Yards 54-inch Marvella at $11.95

—The Broadway—Second Floor.

As the Result of a Fortunate Purchase
We Have Ready for Monday Three Groups of

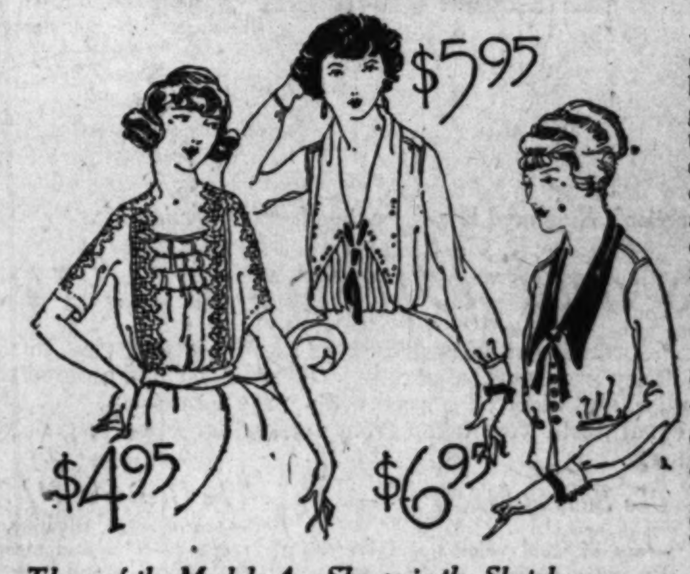
Georgette and Crepe de Chine

Blouses at $4.95, $5.95, $6.95

—Of course, we're pleased with ourselves for having secured these blouses to offer at such low prices—and we have every right so to be!

—Why, they're blouses of the sort that usually are marked at so much more that you'll hardly be able to believe your eyes when you note their $4.95, $5.95 and $6.95 price tickets!

Both Tuck-in and Overblouse Styles



—are represented and really charming ideas of designing have been carried out to a nicety in georgette and crepe de chine of unusually fine quality. Lovely color combinations are noted in some cases; pretty embroidery and lace are introduced as trimming; the colors from which you may choose are flesh, bisque, navy and gray; white, too.

You'll be glad of the addition of a new blouse or two to your wardrobe —and of the opportunity of saving on its purchase that will be possible by taking advantage of Monday's Trio of Price-Lowerings — $4.95, $5.95 and $6.95.

Three of the Models Are Shown in the Sketch

—You will note that one of them is in the tailored style so much favored by many women, while the others are a bit more dressy in character. Both kinds are well represented in Monday's unusually attractive array of blouses. Then, too, the range of sizes includes models in 36 to 44.

—The Broadway—Third Floor.

Smart Tailored Hats

From Such Makers as Vogue, Gage and Hyland
Will Be Grouped for Monday

at ⅓ Less

—There are sailors in wide, narrow roll and straight-brim styles, also tricorne shapes, showing the new bell, square and round crowns of the season. Some are of fine panne's plush, with facings of Lyons velvet or baronet satin in contrasting color. Others are of pressed zibeline. Smartly tailored bows of gros grain ribbon, bias folds of silk and flange edges of duvetyn give them tailored character.

The Ribbons Bearing the Names —of the well-known hat makers mentioned necessarily give the group added importance, for in each case they are associated with fine materials, thoughtful workmanship and careful finishing.

Their Regular Prices Range from $10.00 to $16.50

They're Made of Taffeta of Soft, Fine Quality

—In brown, navy and black, and are trimmed with buttons in contrasting colors—these and their bias bindings at necks, sleeves and novel Empire waistlines, being their sole trimming. They have prettily shaped necklines, and quaintly puffed sleeve cuffs.

—Mothers will find that these dark silk frocks happily solve traveling apparel problems for the little ones. Besides which they are decidedly attractive.

The percentage of tobacco consumed during the summer months greatly exceeds that used during a month in the winter, according to figures compiled by a prominent tobacco man.

"I can only explain the increased sales during the summer season by the fact that smokers are outdoors very much more during the warm weather and have more opportunity to smoke," said the tobacco man. "In the winter time a man won't always smoke when he's outdoors. On a chilly day he prefers to put his hands in his pockets instead of holding a cigarette or cigar. In the summer time a man lying on the beach or out in the country may smoke to his heart's content."—[New York Sun.

Cafeteria in Yosemite is Real Success.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

YOSEMITE, Oct. 22.—A cafeteria in the Yosemite National Park, miles from the big cities where tray carriers generally are found, this year apparently solved a problem of furnishing food at medium prices for tourists far from a railroad. During the last five months approximately 250,000 meals were served at an average cost of about 48 cents each.

The cafeteria was the first ever established in any national park, and it has been so successful that other parks have written for details of its operations. It is probable that the idea will be copied.

Secretary Fall of the Department of the Interior, while here this summer, became a tray carrier at the cafeteria and declared he thought the establishment was a step in the right direction to provide good accommodations at the lowest possible prices.

Food served in the cafeteria is the same quality as that served in Yosemite's American-plan resorts charging as high as $7.50 and $10 per day. The prices differ little from those in cafeterias in San Francisco and Los Angeles. The food is sold at cost, as employees of the National Park Company make up about half the cafeteria's patrons.

Carriage of Former Queen Liliuokalani Sold for Few Dollars.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

HONOLULU (T. H.) Sept. 21. — Royal relics may be tinged with the rosy hue of romance, but their monetary value, especially in Honolulu, is low, as was evidenced here recently when a phaeton and a carriage which had belonged to the stables of Queen Liliuokalani, last of the native monarchs, were sold at auction for $6 and $5, respectively.

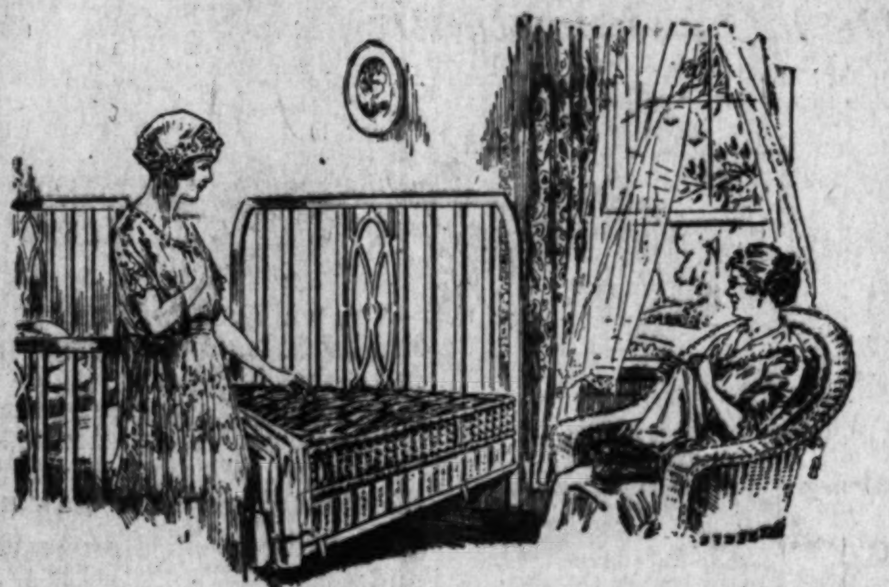
More Evidence of the Fact That Barker Bros. Are "Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes"



SLEEP—The World's Great Restorative

Though we may go to bed ever so weary, despairing of being able to rise in the morning and take up the thread of life where we have left it; sure that the struggle is an uneven one; even dreading to see the light that may mean another day of care; if SLEEP, the gentle healer comes, and lays her thick, dark blanket of forgetfulness, a miracle is worked.

If the ministering angel of the night is allowed to remain undisturbed for a few hours, morning brings, besides a new day, a new body and a changed outlook. Despair, discouragement, and dread have gone with the weariness which weighted us down, and with energy completely restored to nerves and muscles, we are GLAD to meet the new day, and EAGER to see what it may bring.

The healing power which means so much to us should be wooed with the best bed within our power to provide, in order that perfect comfort may allow complete relaxation, and Sleep may have full sway.

Choose Your Vacuum Cleaner Upon Six Points

There are six vital things to look for in a cleaner—things that mean much in ease and thoroughness with which you can clean your house.

It must really clean without scattering dust in the room. It must have a suction powerful enough to draw dirt right through the carpet if necessary.

It must pick up lint, threads, hairs, etc., without injuring the rug or carpet; the brush acts like a lawn mower on the rug. It's too expensive to take as a gift.

The wedding of Miss Lola France, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul France of this city, and Arthur Duncan was performed on Tuesday evening at the Baptist parsonage on Sixth street, the Rev. W. M. Corll officiating, although not yet able after his recent illness to stand during the ceremony. The young people, who are active in the church, have been waiting for the recovery of their pastor, and set the wedding date for the first day he was able to officiate. They will make their home for a time at the residence of Miss Etta Ricker on North Mill street, planning to occupy a home on the Stoner ranch a little later. MUSICAL.

FIRST POP CONCERT.

PHILHARMONIC OUTLINES AN EFFECTIVE PROGRAM.

With Lela Johnstone, dramatic mezzo-soprano as soloist, the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Walter Henry Rothwell, will give its first popular concert of the season at the Philharmonic Auditorium next Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Johnstone, whose voice has by some critics been likened to that of Louise Homer and Matzenauer, was selected last December by George W. Chadwick, Boston composer and director of the New England Conservatory, as soloist for his production of "Noel." She is from Georgia, but has decided to make Los Angeles her home for the future.

The second pair of symphony concerts, with Mme. Schumann-Heink as soloist, will be given the afternoon and evening of November 4 and 5, respectively. Schumann-Heink will sing the Mozart aria "Now Vitellia;" "My Heart at Thy Sweet Coice," from "Samson and Delilah" and one othes number.

The complete program for the first popular concert follows:

Military March No. 4, "Pomp and Circumstance"	Elgar
Ballet Music from "The Cid"	Massenet
"Amour Viens Aider" from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Mrs. Johnstone.
Dance of the Blessed Spirits ("Orpheus")	Gluck-Mottl
Flute Obligato, L. De Lorenzo.
"Rustling of Spring"	Sinding-Sitt
Introduction to Act III (Lohengrin)	Wagner
"Plus Grand Dans Son Obscuritie" (Queen of Sheba)	Gounod
Mrs. Johnstone.
Overture, "The Bat"	Strauss

School Programs.

W. A. Clark, Jr., founder of the Philharmonic Orchestra, has instructed a change in the plan of concerts to be given this year for the high and elementary schools of Los Angeles.

The concerts will be given in the Philharmonic Auditorium at the dates specified in the orchestra prospectus, and no change will be made in the price of tickets. But Mr. Clark, wishing to aid still further the upbuilding of music in our schools, has directed that each school shall retain the money derived from sale of tickets, and use it for the benefit of its own music department.

The money is to be spent for musical instruments, music, the establishment of musical scholarships, or for whatever seems best to serve the desired purpose, it is stated.

The only request Mr. Clark makes is that the schools will at the end of the season submit a report on how the money has been expended.

Heifetz Coming Again.

With his program covering the wide range between the pyrotechnics of Paganini and the simple melodies of his native land, Jascha Heifetz, the young Russian violinist, will play at the Philharmonic Auditorium November 4, and again an entirely different program November 11.

Heifetz, though only 21, is perhaps the finest talent Russia has given to the world, a magnificent example of what old Russian system of training could do for genius.

A graduate of the Petrograd Conservatory, he is not merely a superb violinist, but is thoroughly trained in piano, theory of music, orchestration and composition. He is a fine linguist, and during his student days specialized in history, mathematics and chemistry.

He will land in San Francisco November 2 after a long tour of Russia and Australia, and before going East will be heard in Fresno, Bakersfield and San Diego, as well as Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The Los Angeles Trio.

Including much new music never before heard here, trios of Brandts-Buys, Tschaikowsky, Beethoven and Vincent D'Indy, and sonatas by Busoni, Frank Bridge, Richard Strauss and Beethoven, this season's program of the Los Angeles Trio, promise to be more interesting than usual.

It is now seven years since May McDonald Hope initiated this enjoyable form of ensemble playing in this city, and because of her consistent artistic endeavor the trio is becoming an institution.

As a pianiste Mrs. Hope needs no introduction, nor does Calmon Luboviski, the trio's violinist, who has the distinction of having been Franz Von Vescey's only pupil, also of having been soloist under Richard Strauss and Nikisch.

Ilya Bronson, 'cellist, is also known in Los Angeles for his devotion to chamber music and his work as soloist of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

Grace Wood Jess Recital.

Presenting a series of plantation tunes, Russian folk-songs, the Golden Legend of the Time of Christ, and French Chansons, Grace Wood Jess will appear in recital at the Gamut Club Auditorium November 1. She will be accompanied by Charles T. Ferry in all numbers except the plantation songs for which she will provide her own accompaniment on an old-fashioned dulcimer.

Buhlig with Detroit Symphony.

Richard Buhlig, whose series of eight piano recitals is creating decided interest in Los Angeles, will spend the Christmas holiday season in New York, and while there will make and correct a number of player-piano records.

En route westward again, Mr. Buhlig will be soloist with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra under Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Lela Johnstone,

Dramatic mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist at Philharmonic Orchestra popular concert next Sunday.

NOT .. A .. SLAPSTICK .. COMEDY.

Even Though This Looks Like It.

Jascha Heifetz and Sister Pauline,

Showing just what effect a discord may sometimes produce.

Young Violinist to Play at Gamut.

With a program including Concert No. 1, (De Beriot,) Legend (Wieniawski,) Orientale (Cui,) Mazurka-Kayawiak (Wieniawski,) and Zigeunerweisen (Sarasate,) Ruth Wilson the gifted little pupil of Gregor Cherniavsky will be heard in recital at the Gamut Club Friday evening. The concert will be free to the public.

Orpheus Club Activities.

Augmented by the return of many former members until its strength is close to ninety voices, the Orpheus Club is preparing for its sixteenth season. The first concert will be given Thursday evening, December 1, this and all subsequent performances having been arranged for the Philharmonic Auditorium.

Grauman's Sunday Concert.

In keeping with the Halloween season is this morning's program at Grauman's Theater, where, beginning at 11 o'clock, a "Concert Humoresque" will be offered by the orchestra, under the direction of Mischa Guterson.

Most of the numbers will be in grotesque or humorous vein, but an occasional bit of romance will be injected to avoid monotony of mood. First on the program is Dvorak's "Carnival" overture.

Calmon Luboviski,

Violinist with Los Angeles Trio, which will shortly begin concert series.

A group of four orchestral numbers will follow: "Bambula" (Coleridge-Taylor,) "Baba Yaga" and "Kikimura" (Liadow,) and Percy Grainger's "Gumsucker's March," so named because of its Australian theme, Australians being facetiously said to live by sucking the leaves of the gum trees which grow in such profusion on the island continent.

The Gamut Club quartet will sing; another orchestral number, Moszkowsky's "Guitar," will be given, and Mr. Tibbetts, the baritone of the quartet, will give the Toreador song from "Carmen."

The program will be concluded by Offenbach's overture to "Orpheus," the cadenza in which will be played by Jaime Overton, with whom it is original. Special scenic effects have been designed for this number, and it is promised that they will prove a pleasant surprise.

With Netherlands Trio.

It is announced that Brahm van den Berg, pianist, will divide his time this season between his students and concert engagements. Mr. Van den Berg will appear as soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra, and will also play with the Netherlands Trio, the personnel of which includes Christiaan Timmner, violinist, and Annie Timmner, 'celliste.

Mr. Timmner founded and was the director of one of the best known chamber music societies in Holland, and Mr. Van den Berg has had European experience as a conductor of orchestra and opera, besides his thorough training as a pianist.

It is promised that lovers of chamber music will have through this organization the opportunity of hearing many works seldom given here and beyond the capacity of the average trio.

Dancing at Hollywood.

On Tuesday evening, Edith Lindsay will give at the Hollywood High School Auditorium an interesting program under the auspices of the Hollywood Community Chorus. Miss Lindsay's numbers will be "Water Sprite," "La Danse Jolie" and "Russian Danse."

Jane Gay and Morton Davis will give an exhibition fox trot, Margaret Brown and Sarah Chandler a Holland dance.

Optimists' Meeting.

The American Music Optimists' Club will meet Thursday evening. A program will, as usual, be given, preceded by a dinner, at which Dr. and Mrs. Allison Gaw will speak. Their recent poetic achievement, "Pharaoh's Daughter," will be produced next season by the Shuberts.

The entire program will be given over to the compositions of Ward Stevens, one of the first New York artists to so favor the club. He will preside at the piano, and the artists assisting him will be Flora Meyers Engle, soprano; Anna Rogers, contralto, and Clifford Lott.

An informal reception to the honor guests will follow.

PENALTY OF GENIUS.

Of course, we have tears for the world's treatment of Mozart, Schubert and other great masters of the past, who gave beauty to the world at the cost of their own lives, but how many weep for Moritz Moszkowski, broken in health and ruined financially by the war? Every one knows Moszkowski's music; it is one of the most valuable contributions to the piano literature of our time. No one questions his genius. Yet, at the age of 65, he is practically helpless, and only a few know or care. There is much irony in the world, but few situations carry more of it than this. Probably in fifty or a hundred years people will be weeping over the sorrows of Moszkowski. Meanwhile, he is dying quite inconspicuously, and all over the world his music is bringing joy to thousands.

VIOLINIST IN CONCERT.

Maurice Stoloff, Russian violinist, protege of William A. Clark, Jr., has a busy season before him. Besides playing in the Philharmonic Orchestra he will fill many concert engagements in California and the West. He appeared as soloist at the Alexandria Hotel for the Council of Jewish Women Thursday afternoon and has been engaged to present the whole program for the Catholic Women's Club November 16. His program will include: Concerto No. 4 D Minor (Vieuxtemps;) Lullaby (Max Reger;) "Le Jongleur" (Moffat,) and Russian Dance (Zimbalist.)

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN.

American women have the most beautiful eyes in the world, says a widely known London photographer.

With a view of reducing her weight, a young woman of Uniontown, Pa., hiked up a three-mile mountain road every morning—and gained thirty pounds.

Lincoln park, Chicago's most famous pleasure ground, is patrolled by twelve police women.

Chinese women have taken to skirts and are wearing them over their trousers.

Where fifteen English women students come forward in any one district, the British ministry of labor is empowered to institute classes in cookery and general domestic work.

Blind men make good gardeners, says Mrs. Duncombe, of London, founder of the Guild of Blind Gardeners, who was an enthusiastic gardener before her sight began to fail. "I can tell different flowers quite easily by the sense of touch," she said. Miss D. Brown, who is interested in the guild, quotes the instance of a blind gardener she employed who could tell different types of roses by touch alone, where to other people scent was the chief guide.

Notwithstanding the popular western fancy that fashions never change in China, the Chinese woman is painstakingly particular as to the exact length and fullness—or scantiness—of her coats, skirts and trousers. She is carefully precise about the width of bias bands or braid or lace that she uses for trimming, the number and arrangement of fastenings, the shape and height of her collar. All of these details vary as tyranically from season to season—under Shanghai guidance—as certain style features do with us under the leadership of New York or Paris. Moreover, as against our four seasons, the fashion devotee of China takes account of eight, each with its appropriate style and weight of clothing.—[Asia Magazine.

Lawrence Tibbett,

Baritone with Gamut Club Quartet, to sing this morning at Grauman's Theater.

PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—If most of us made an honest confession we would admit having in our hearts the desire to sing. We do not mean to include in this list the unfortunate few who are tone deaf; or the men or women who carry only one tune. These latter are, we believe, like the too-early reported death of Mark Twain, in an exaggerated class. Trained from our youth in practice during the morning bath, we mature with that craving to make with our voices sounds which are more or less musical—according to our natural endowments. The older we grow, and the more we drift over the country into different places, the firmer becomes our conviction that people generally are born with the yearning to sing.

A few days ago we journeyed to the Massachusetts city of Worcester. The sixty-third musical festival of the association which holds forth in that progressive spot was about to open; so we threw some odds and ends into a bag and hopped aboard a train.

Don't let anyone convince you, good reader, that business men aren't musical, or that they do not go willingly to weekly rehearsals over a long period every year. The evidence so recently laid before us is indisputable. For we heard a chorus which sang so well—and such difficult music as Edgar Stillman Kelley's "The Pilgrim's Progress"—that even the musicians got excited.

The festival started under a bit of a limp with "The Damnation of Faust." The chorus was fair, but not up to Worcester's own standard. Whereupon, the night following, every member reached his and her seat with the metaphorical blood welling in the eye. When we state that never has Mr. Kelley's big composition been so well performed we give some idea of the quality of those Worcester singers.

WORCESTER REFLECTIONS.

Conductor Nelson Coffin, the New York Symphony Orchestra—combining with the chorus—and Arthur Middleton, one of America's very best baritones, galloped away with the honors of "The Pilgrim's Progress" performance. Don't permit anyone to delude you that this is easy music to sing or play. "Difficulty" should be Edgar Kelley's middle name, not Stillman.

There came, after the Pilgrims had progressed sufficiently for to please the majority, two orchestra concerts which Rene Pollain conducted, and which offered as soloists Miss Estelle Liebling and Miss Ottilie Schillig. Miss Liebling is always mistress of her art even if her voice is not unusual; while Miss Schillig, singing with the orchestra, recovered from the sea of failure some of the reputation she lost in the Kelley work. This time she wasn't nervous, so her beautiful soprano had its full chance.

Judson House, an American tenor we are likely to hear more about as time goes on; Fred Patton, a gifted bass-baritone who can quality anytime for the strong man's test; Charles Galagher, a most polite basso; George Meader, who would be one of our greatest tenors if he had more voice; Miss Grace Kerns, a charming soprano; and the knock 'em dead Rosa Ponselle, from the Metropolitan Opera, all contributed to the success of the festival. It lost money, we discovered, but what's a little money in the face of such a splendid accomplishment?

CHICAGO OPERA GOSSIP.

We may rail all we like about tolerance of speech, including gossip, but it will flow merrily on. There are altogether too many pivot-hung tongues to stop the outpouring from speculative minds. For some time there has been a raising of the eloquent forefinger whenever Mary Garden's name was mentioned. "She is going to quit, see if she isn't!" come the merry gossipers' warning.

Perhaps Mary has some such intention (between ourselves, we would not be surprised to see her relinquish her post as general director of the Chicago Opera Association before the end of the approaching season.) But—did she have that reported difference of opinion with Mrs. Harold McCormick when the two were together this last summer, at Mrs. McCormick's Switzerland home?

Mrs. McCormick—who, with Mr. McCormick, pays most of the deficit in the Chicago company's operations—has just caused to be issued by that management an official denial that any but the most cordial relations exist between herself and the prima donna-impresario. She had some very complimentary things to say about Miss Garden.

Meanwhile, the gossipers are still raising the warning forefinger and continuing with their predictions. All of which makes excellent publicity for Business Manager George Spangler and those aides who are trying to sell all the season tickets they can.

MR. GATTI-CASAZZA RETURNS.

The king of all opera impresarios is back at his desk again, in the southwest corner of the Metropolitan Operahouse, to wit: At Thirty-ninth street and Seventh avenue. Mr. Gatti is not cast down over the coming season. No one realizes better than he what the loss of Caruso means. But he will try his best to give New York first-class opera, and we have a notion that he will succeed.

His decision to open the season November 14, with Mme. Galli-Curci and Benjamino Gigli, isn't in the least surprising. The little prima donna had not expected to come to New York until after the conclusion of her engagement with the Chicago Opera Association, in Chicago. But her time was free in early November, and as usual Mr. Gatti moved sagaciously.

Among the novelties promised as certainties are Erich Korngold's "The Dead City," with the new German prima donna Marie Jeritza and Johannes Sembach; Massenet's "La Navarraise," in which Geraldine Farrar is to have the leading soprano role; Verdi's "Ernani," with Rosa Ponselle, Giovanni Martinelli, and Titta Ruffo; and Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys," in which Miss Ponselle, Mme. Alda, and Mr. Gigli are to sing. We are also to have "Die Walkuere" and "Tristan and Isolde" in German, and "Parsifal" and "Lohengrin," in English.

THE MUSIC RACE IS ON.

They're off! Again are we facing the onrushing horde of music artists, bent on getting some sort of press criticisms which can be deleted into something of commercial value from an advertising standpoint. A few of these instrumentalists and singers, proven to be worth paying money to hear, will come out of their experiences with some pecuniary profit. Most of the others will not.

It would be difficult to estimate how much is wasted in the course of a formal New York music season by young men and women who never should be allowed to appear publicly in a music metropolis. Fortunately there are some musicians worth hearing.

One of them is Alfred Mirovich, a pianist newcomer of a year ago. He gave a Carnegie Hall recital, disclosing strength, a good technic, and an excellent if not superlative interpretative equipment. Mirovich was not at his best, however, on this occasion. We expect him to improve when he is next heard here.

SOME OTHER RECITALISTS.

Among the other recitalists who have contributed in getting the music ball to rolling rapidly is Mischa Violin (no this is not a mistake in spelling.) Mischa, by the way, plays the violin, not as well as he might, nor, probably, as he would like, but quite respectably.

Also Ervin Nyiregyhazi, who has changed the spelling of his name without materially improving his pianistic art. This Hungarian youth has technic enough to light fires with, and strength, but that rare jewel, consistency, never perches herself in Ervin's necktie.

There was a newcomer pianist in Eduardo Dini Anghinelli, who was interesting but not especially important, and another in the Finn, Selim Palmgrin, who was better treated by the critics in the role of pianist than composer. His wife, Mme. Maikki Jaernfeldt, made her debut as a singer without breaking any records. And Miss Alice Frisca, a California pianiste, played with much technic and not enough heart to suit those who like temperamental display.

With the first Mme. Galli-Curci concert of the season quite filling the Hippodrome, and Arthur Middleton surpassing himself in the first recital of songs we have had from him in some two years, no one could complain of music quietude.

But another fortnight will see the symphony orchestra started; then we'll have more than enough for all varieties of music taste.

GARFIELD READ BOOK IN FIVE MINUTES.

President Garfield and James G. Blaine were men who possessed unusual faculties, according to A. B. Farquhar.

"Garfield, afterward the President was the most rapid reader I have ever seen. One evening when we were sitting together in the Judge's library he asked Garfield if he had read a book which was lying on the table. Before he could answer Judge Black was called out of the room and Mr. Garfield remarked to me:

"'No, I never saw this book before.'

"He took it up and, turning the pages rapidy, had gone through it by the time the judge returned, which was in about five minutes. Then he answered:

"'Oh yes. I have read it.' And went on to give a very interesting and peculiarly thorough criticism of the work.

"Afterwood I told Judge Black that Garfield's sole acquaintance with the book extended over five minutes, and the judge answered that five minutes was long enough for Garfield to get the gist of any book." [System.

PORTERVILLE.

More than a thousand Tulare people and their friends attended the formal opening of the Tulare County Golf and Country Club house near Strathmore Saturday and Sunday. A number of outside guests, including several from foreign lands, enjoyed the hospitality of the members on this occasion, which marked an epoch in social life of the county. The golf tourney which opened Saturday afternoon, closing the following afternoon, formed one of the chief attractions. Mr. Waddel of Lindsay took first prize in the men's division, with Mr. Finch as second. Mrs. F. L. Richards of Lindsay took honors for the ladies. Handsome silver cups were the trophies. California fruits, palms, Halloween novelties and Japanese lanterns were the motif in a most attractive decoration scheme. Dancing, tea and a buffet supper added to the enjoyment of this banner social event of the season. A number of interesting lesser affairs are scheduled for the near future, indicating unusual activity for the winter. First of these is a tea to be given Saturday afternoon to some 150 guests by Mrs. Edward B. Caldwell of Lindsay.

Special interest marked the first of a series of card parties given at the Women's Club house on Monday afternoon, with an attendance of over 150. Halloween colors and autumn fruits and flowers were used as decorations. A special musical program was given and delightful refreshments added to the pleasure of the occasion. Mesdames Harry Pohlman, Fred Gessler, W. H. Shry, W. H. Harvey and Miss Margaret Box were hostesses.

Twenty-two countries were represented and each one surrendered its own flag to Uncle Sam, impersonated by Mrs. C. B. Stevens, and received in exchange the Stars and Stripes. A picnic luncheon was eaten at noon.

YORBA LINDA.

The Mmes. Brown, Welsch and Quigley were delegates to the Orange county federated meeting at Anaheim Saturday. A good story was told on the poet, James Foley, who had been the speaker of the evening and guest of honor at a banquet given by the Yorba Linda club women recently. Among the delicious viands prepared by the hostess committee was a dainty salad with a hoge slice of avocado, topped by a delicious dressing. Mr. Foley, so the story goes, sampled his salad, glanced over the tables where 120 guests were seated, and saw that he had not been favored, and with a humorous chuckle said, "My, but you Yorba Lindians are reckless with your avocados."

Mr. and Mrs. Plummer Stuart entertained the Double X Club on Saturday evening. After a short business session games were played and the hostess, assisted by the women members, served delicious refreshments. There were nearly twenty present.

The People and Their Daily Troubles

DOROTHY DIX TALKS

TACT

BY DOROTHY DIX.

A schoolgirl asks me if I will tell her what tact is and how she can acquire it.

Why, my dear, tact is just the golden rule put into action. It is doing unto others as you would have them do unto you. It is saying to other people the agreeable things that you would like them to say to you. It is showing unto others the courteous little attentions that it would please you to death to have other people show to you. It is keeping off the grass of other people's little prejudices and peculiarities as you would like to have them keep off of yours.

Tact is the ultimate expression of good breeding, good manners and good feeling.

Tactful people are those who always make you feel comfortable and at ease in their presence and pleased with yourself. They never irritate you nor antagonize you. They never wound and mortify you. They never argue. They never intrude their own opinions, unless it is necessary, and when they do they never try to force them upon you.

They are just as loyal to their beliefs as you are to yours, but they express them in a way that leaves no rancor and makes you feel that intelligent people may disagree on their point of view without calling each other names.

There are two ways, the right way and the wrong way, of doing even the right thing.

Haven't you had people give you things in a way that made you want to fling them back in their faces, and haven't you had people refuse you things so graciously that you actually felt grateful for what you didn't get? Haven't you had people invite you to their house in a manner that made you feel that they were doing it under compulsion, and because it was an obligation they could no longer escape, and haven't you been asked to other places in a way that made you feel that your hostess was simply pining for your society, and that she would consider it an honor and a pleasure to have you beneath her roof? That's the difference between tact and lack of tact.

Haven't you got an Aunt Suzanna who never gives you a five-dollar bill without ramming a moral lecture down your throat with it, and telling you how she has to deny herself to give to the poor? And haven't you had Mrs. Blank say to you, "I told my daughter she really must invite you to spend a week-end with us, you get out so little?"

Tact is the magic that enables us to do even unpleasant things in a pleasant way. It sugar coats its lectures. It takes the sting out of its reproof. It does not dwell upon weaknesses so much as it insists upon our good qualities until it inspires us to develop what is best in us.

Tact makes us remember. It keeps us from discussing the divorce evil in the presence of some woman whose heart has been broken by her husband's faithlessness. It prevents us from talking about washtubs, and picks, and shovels to the new-rich, who have just purchased an expensive family tree, whose roots go back to William, the Conqueror. It keeps us from calling a lame man, limpy, or asking a blind man if he sees.

Tact laughs with people, never at them. It jokes the owner of a $10,000 car about his old bus, but it never derides a poor man's tin Lizzie. Tact never tells funny stories about fat women to a lady who weighs over 125, or celebrates the birthday of one past 20.

Tact is the press agent that singles out the one thing the individual can do, and turns the spotlight on him or her while he or she gives a star performance. It is what makes you put the soft pedal on your own favorite topics, and give others the cue for their own monologues. It is what makes you ask a mother about her children, or a business man how the grocery trade is getting along, or an actor what he did last season, or an author about his new book.

Tact is the kindliness that notices your new frock, that is interested in your new house, that remembers the dishes you like and the things you said.

Tact never says:

"What in the world made you get that hat? It makes you look like a figure of fun." It never reminds you that it has heard your favorite story a hundred times. It never informs you that the cherished antique on which you have bankrupted yourself is bogus, and that you have been cheated in your purchase. It never jumps rough-footed on your most cherished ideals, or rends your heroes limb from limb.

Tact is the blessed oil of human kindness that lubricates the wheels of life, and it makes us ready to forgive the faults of those who are lucky enough to possess it.

Some are born tactful, but one may acquire tact by the simple expedient of treating other as they would like to be treated themselves. You know the things that please, and soothe you, and you may be very sure that the very same things will please and soothe others. You like to have what you do appreciated. You like to have people gracious and kind to you. You like to have your little talents exploited. You dread ridicule. You cower under ill-timed jests about your personal appearance and belongings. So does everyone else. Just remember to bring out people's good points, and help them camouflage their bad ones. That's tact.

LETTERS TO "THE TIMES."

Philippine Independence.

LOS ANGELES HARBOR, Oct. 20. [To the Editor of The Times:] We are very fortunate and very thankful for the American laws vested in the islands from the beginning up to their administrative days of today. Herewith in connection with the present problem I summarize the details to the people of the world judging from the progress made in the islands since they have been under the protection of the United States.

Philippines, in regard to her present problem why she is ready at any time to stand with those already recognized nations of the world except one thing: The government, we heard, of the islands is very nearly bankrupt. A bill was introduced and approved in the Senate that it is quite proper to build two mansions for . . . at Baguio. Now if we will invite ourselves to this problem today there is no difficulty in solving why the Wood-Forbes investigation did not lead us to a favorable recommendation for independence.

Quezon, president of the Filipino Senate, landed here some time ago, to urge independence. Is he really after the Filipino independence? I don't think he is! Suppose the United States should grant us independence, can the Filipino afford to exercise it even little by little without troubling other nations?

Being a Filipino myself, and having a little better understanding about this, I would say no! Because, the treasury is empty. What we have to do is to establish economy among ourselves. A co-operative idea among our own race and as the world says that of brotherhood is the one key to prosperity and success. Those two things should be the sole policy of the people to establish a nation.

A. BARIATOS, U.S.N.

Government and God.

GLENDALE, Oct. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In your issue of October 10, Mr. N. W. Philbrook has a most interesting letter on the subject of "Our Rights," in which he quite clearly shows that one may be a 100 per cent American, yet fall far short of what is required of the true follower of the Prince of Peace. Mr. Philbrook leads one to believe that he may be loyal to Jesus the Christ and at the same time a loyal citizen of the United States. He seems to believe that if his personal actions are in conformity with higher law the fact of his loyalty to Uncle Sam does not vitiate his loyalty to Christ; which is rather peculiar reasoning, for, as an American citizen, many of his actions are necessarily performed by proxy—that is, by officers of the law; and to maintain its life the nation is obliged to do many things that are contrary to the higher law, the law of Christ.

What is obviously the most difficult thing for a would-be Christian to do, because he firmly refuses to do it, is the give his whole-hearted allegiance to God. The primary purpose of human government is to maintain social order, by force, if necessary. The purpose of Christ's government is to maintain social order without recourse to physical force of any kind or degree. Alleged Christians refuse to believe that form of social order possible on earth, for they have the foolish notion that Uncle Sam is more competent to maintain order amongst his people than God the Father of Christ is, despite the well-known fact that it is impossible to legislate righteousness into the heart of man. Do these good church people imagine that order is maintained in Heaven by armies and navies, jails and police courts? Or, on the other hand, do they think that the soul's character is changed at the moment of death? Can they not perceive by the Gospel that the purpose of Christ's teaching is to give us knowledge of how people live happily in Heaven by exercising that form of behavior while on earth? Did He not intend His church to be the schoolroom of that social behavior which, in due course, will graduate us into the world of bliss beyond the grave? "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in Heaven."

JOS. GUIDINGER.

Sticky Streets.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 19.—[To the Editor of The Times:] A business man who insists on riding his bicycle to business says that formerly a showery spell like the recent one would have cleaned Los Angeles' streets thoroughly; that the persistent slime this time, and which caused several accidents and a couple of deaths, is due to dust which has been accumulating many months, due to your recent Mayor's desire to save the city about $60,000 a year by ending a vacuum cleaning contract. The business man tells me—a long-staying visitor in your otherwise beautiful city—that such flushing as is done causes the dust and oily particles to congeal, whereas the vacuum method sucked both up, and that soon after flushing the dust is about as bad as before, and that it is worse than it ever has been since the city was paved. He says the $60,000 a year that is "saved" should be compared with a total that he puts at millions, lost through deterioration of clothes, tires, automobiles, in fact practically everything. He says the dust is peculiarly gritty and irritating and is a nuisance even in his office, which is on the upper floor of a tall building. I told him to tell it to The Times. He is like many who do not like to spread information in that way—unfortunately, I believe; so I do it for him. Clean streets make a very valuable impression on visitors. Add that to the other reasons indicated, for having them.

A. RAY CONTEEUR.

Howls at Hooch.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 17.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I have remained silent during the terrible battle of cats, sponsored and refereed by our fellow-citizen, E. Wise, but the remarks of Henry Hooch, in The Times of this morning, have filled me with such wrathy and disgusted feelings that I must ask you to place them for Henry to see. Mr. Hooch rebels, jocularly, to be sure, against the appearance of the legs of Los Angeles girls and women—stating that three out of every twenty pairs on the streets are worthy of approval (Mr. Hooch's approval) and the other seventeen pairs are a number of unpleasant things which he had time and vocabulary to list. There is much that could be said of Mr. Hooch's remarks. It has undoubtedly taken years of careful and personal observation on the part of H. Hooch, Esq., to compile his very valuable statistics on such a hugely significant subject, and the funny part of it is that, with only six good looking legs out of forty, he should have had the patience to continue the long and tedious investigation.

If, as Mr. Hooch declares, there are so very, very few worth a second glance—why is it that every girl and woman on the streets of our Los Angeles, who wears her skirts to her knees, is stared at by every man (who hasn't his wife on his arm) on our Los Angeles streets, until said girl or woman gets off said L. A. streets—regardless of the contour of said appendages? And, what, but a man's mind, makes a woman's leg to her knee so much more exciting than her arm to her elbow? Is it possible that Mr. Hooch is so certain of being in the pitifully few beauty-legged of the masculine species that he can afford to be so lavish in his criticism of the particular "branch" of Los Angeles femininity which gives him such a kick?

S. DAYTON.

Time to Stop It.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 14.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Because I have always received the Times as a sure enough he-man's paper, I take the liberty of addressing you on what I conceive to be a very serious menace, not only to the foundation of our government, but also to the very elements of democracy itself.

I refer to an article which I saw in yesterday's news dispatches from San Francisco, also from a local, to the effect that the Federated Women's Clubs of San Francisco and Los Angeles have resolved upon the blacklisting of Fatty Arbuckle, whether he wins a verdict from the jury or is convicted. They publicly announce that no matter what happens at the trial, they propose to banish all his films, and if possible banish him.

Now, the writer personally does not know Mr. Arbuckle, nor does he know anybody that does know him, nor has he any connection now, or at any time remotely, or otherwise, with anything or anybody who is connected with Mr. Arbuckle, and personally, I thought the case was going to be a very difficult one to defend, and would not look at all good for Mr. Arbuckle, but when he or any other man, anywhere, at any time or place, is to be condemned, regardless of whether our courts condemn him, then immediately I am for him, or for any other man who is to be unfairly treated.

N. R. RUTHERFORD.

"Enemies of Ireland."

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 16.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Permit an old-time "transplant" from near "Where the River Shannon Flows" to express his hearty appreciation of the well-timed article which appeared in last Friday's issue under the above caption. The writer, a survivor of "the war between the sections," still retains an affectionate regard for his native isle, reveres many of its quaint traditions, but takes no stock in the Sinn Fein movement looking to an entanglement of relations between this country and Great Britain.

The Times' editorial simply cites how "people of Irish descent in Los Angeles and elsewhere in America, who may depend upon local leaders to keep them informed of conditions in their former homeland, are given a wrong impression of what is happening across the Atlantic." They are misled to believe that the prevailing sentiment in Southern Ireland is overwhelmingly Sinn Fein. The actual facts warrant no such conclusion, the returns from the last year's elections to the contrary notwithstanding. Irish elections—like some of our American institutions—don't always reflect the honest convictions of their individual units. It's also a well-established fact that no other bunch of patriots is better equipped by nature for operating the walking-delegate or agitator role than my worthy and esteemed compatriots when once they become warmed up to a realization of the situation.

C. S. MAGRATH.

Too Many Laws.

LOS ANELES, Oct. 16.—[To the Editor of The Times:] We need more conflicting, inconsistent laws. A person with good intentions and fair judgment, but without a lawyer at his elbow every minute, can sometimes do what he thinks is right and not lay himself liable to so-and-so dollars' fine or so many months in jail, or both such fine and imprisonment. That is a great mistake. Let the laws be reversed for every alternate block and every change of the moon, so that the cop at the next corner can always pinch us for doing just what the last one tagged us for not doing. By this trick all the money in circulation could be collected as penalties and kept useless in public treasuries; then officials would make the fishiest efficiency reports ever seen.

We denizens of Angel Town, especially those of us who live near the limits, under laws that are the limit, find ourselves in about the same predicament as the Lord High Executioner in the opera, "The Mikado." When we have suffered sufficiently from swaying thorns and tree branches that lacerate our bodies and hang us like Absalom whenever we try to perambulate on a public sidewalk, suppose we obey nature's first law—self-preservation—also a gospel mandate; we cut off the limbs that offend us. On Children's Clothes, Too, The Deltor Means Money Saved!

LITTLE frilly, flowery things—sturdy suits with a decidedly bachelor air—diminutive thistledown bits of clothing that add much pleasure to the first few years of life!

Now you can have the fun of making them yourself and making them for less money than such tiny things could possibly cost hitherto!

Because of a wonderful invention, accompanying every Butterick pattern—the Deltor—any woman, no matter what her sewing experience, can easily make her children's clothes; she can create with her own fingers the dainty little things she has always desired for her family; and—with the Deltor—she can actually save money even on these clothes!

The DELTOR

Saves 50c to $10 On a Gown for Yourself

GO to the Butterick pattern counter. And whether you select a child's style or one for yourself, remember that the Deltor specifies ¼ to 1⅜ yards less than would otherwise be possible—a saving of 50c to $10 on every frock for yourself.

First, the Deltor gives you an individual layout chart (yes, individual—not just a general chart, but one for your exact size and for each suitable width of material.) You buy ¼ to 1⅜ yards less material on every garment, a saving that amounts to 50c to $10 on materials alone on every gown for yourself!

Second, you follow simple picture-and-word illustrations of just how to put together the little garment you are making. Your needle fairly flies, saving hours of time, and you achieve the professional's own delightful results!

Third, vastly important and infinitely small details of finish are revealed to you. Any little whim which the bloomers, blouse or frock you are making, embodies, is clearly explained. Your finished garment, as smart as those in exclusive children's shops, is as sweet as youth itself!

For That French Touch you can give the children clothes—with the Deltor. Advice on the upbringing of children, how to run your house and keep within your income. Brilliant fiction.

The Times Literary Page Books and Their Make

By Thomas F. and Lillian C. Ford

SNAPSHOTS OF NEW FICTION.

The Fall Crop of New Novels Shows Realism, Strident and Otherwise, in the Work of Both British and American Authors.

From the scores of volumes of recent fiction there have been selected some half a dozen for brief consideration today. These are all distinguished in one way or another from the avalanche of novels now pouring from the presses.

For the select few there is May Sinclair's "Mr. Waddington of Wyck," and ironic study of a shallow, pompous, utterly insupportable man of position, who never once suspected his own hypocrisy and inconsequence. The thing is done with more than mere cleverness. Miss Sinclair is an intellectual who writes with no idea of obtaining wide popularity. Her own keen delight in dissecting the unconscious Mr. Wyck is evident enough, and she contrives for the most part to extend the delight to the reader. When she is through, poor self-satisfied Mr. Wyck hasn't a leg left to stand on, but as he is left in happy ignorance of this, all is well in a world that is always ready to prosper the self-assertive biped.

"Dangerous Ages."

A book in which the author found little delight, except the very cold one of turning life inside out and revealing its essentially tragic nature is Rose Macaulay's "Dangerous Ages." Not so superficially clever as "Potterism," which has been so widely read and discussed for the past year, it goes deeper and leaves a more permanent impression. The dangerous ages are those of women, men having sufficient interests to absorb much of their time and thought, and so they escape being left a prey to the tremors. There is just one age that Miss Macaulay finds has passed the danger mark, and that is only reached after the hold upon life has weakened—in the seventies or later. Then, time and events matter little or not at all. The grandmamma of the novel has ceased to struggle and to worry and has settled down to a wise placidity.

The great-granddaughter of 20, her mother of 43, her aunt of 30, and her grandmother of 63, are all passing through dangerous ages. And what is the danger? From within. Life continually threatens to overwhelm them. Unstable, uncertain longing for self-realization, but unable to attain it, they are buffeted and battered, if not quite defeated. It is the youngest of all, a self-seeking chit of 20, who succeeds in taking into her grasping little claws what she wants from life; whether or not she succeeds in holding it time alone will unfold. It is her aunt, a woman of 30, who loses herself beyond recovery, though even her plight is little worse than that of the others.

The brilliantly satiric handling of psychoanalysis in this novel would

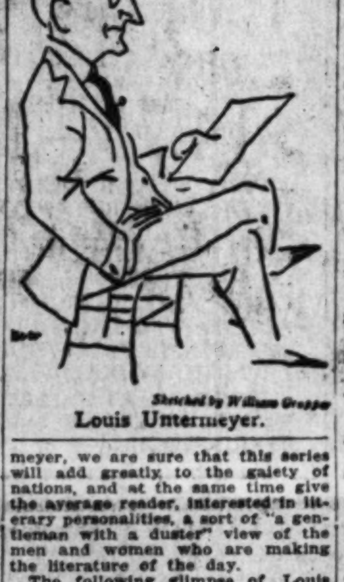
DRY BONES VS. PEP.

The Bookman, under the editorial direction of John Farrar, who is, by the way, one of the soundest of the younger group of poets, is rapidly becoming one of the most interesting of the journals of literary opinion in the United States.

The magazine is interesting in that Mr. Farrar has the courage to step out of the beaten path of solemnity that is supposed to hedge round the august person of a journal of literary opinion and inject a little genuine sprightliness into its pages. True, at times this sprightliness has descended to the level of flippancy; we might even go so far as to say that some of the writers have given us a dash of peppy journalese, but nevertheless there is always to be found a solid undertone of dignity and authority all compact.

For against this lighter vein we find articles from the pens of such learned, conservative and dignified authorities as Prof. Stuart P. Sherman, Hildegarde Hawthorne, William Lyon Phelps, Ellen Glasgow, Gertrude Atherton and Richard Burton.

A feature of the October Bookman, one that we are inclined to think will attract wide attention and be a source of much comment and amusement, is the "Literary Spotlight," which will continue for several issues, and in which some of the leading literary lights of the day will be discussed anonymously. Personally we feel that we should like it better were the articles signed, but if we may judge by the first, which deals with Louis Untermeyer, we are sure that this series will add greatly to the gaiety of nations, and at the same time give the average reader, interested in literary personalities, a sort of "a gentleman with a duster" view of the men and women who are making the literature of the day.



Sketched by William Gropper

Louis Untermeyer.

The following glimpse of Louis Untermeyer, the gifted poet-critic, whose vocation is that of a manufacturing jeweler, together with the sketch, is lifted from the October Bookman:

"He is 5 feet 7 inches in height, stocky, inclined to take on weight because of an uncontrollable lust for sweets; is equally worried about the state of the world and the thinning of his hair; puns as often (and as atrociously) as Christopher Morley, and is as fussy about his neckties as a Wall-street stock broker. The absurd smallness of his ears is overcompensated by the prominence of his nose. He has a long, slanting forehead, wears eyeglasses, and swered by a polite request that the not suited to his temperament. The shape of his head is dolichocephalic.

We are very certain that the reference to Mr. Untermeyer's head as dolichocephalic, were it made in other days and in that region once described and sometimes now referred to as Dixieland, would be answered by a polite request that the writer or the editor express his preference as to weapons.

However, those good old days are gone and we can only contemplate Mr. Untermeyer as reading the article with the mixed emotions that such personalities are supposed to elicit from well-bred gentlemen whose only lapses from dignity are the result of being cursed with the artistic temperament.

The sketch here shown is by William Gropper, and we strongly suspect it was made of Mr. Untermeyer while that distinguished gentleman was reading a letter from his equally distinguished contemporary and friend, H. L. Mencken, who, we are reliably informed, affects the pleasing conceit of usually closing his letters to Mr. Untermeyer with the pious subscription, "Yours in Christ."

CLEMENCEAU'S PREDICTION.

In the spring of 1899 Clemenceau returned from a trip to Greece. While calling on Mme. De Noailles she asked him about his impression of Greece. "Well, madame," replied Clemenceau, "I am not going to talk of the grandeur of the Acropolis, nor do I intend to torment you with a lecture on archaeology. I have been to see strange and picturesque lands, among them Crete. You will never guess, though, my most interesting discovery in the island, one more interesting by far than the splendors of the excavations. I will tell you. A young advocate, a M. Venezuelos . . . Venizelos? Frankly I cannot quite recall his name, but the whole of Europe will be speaking of him in a few years."

Thus at a casual tea party the old Tiger of France predicted glory and splendor for the man who suddenly shone in the maelstrom of Greek policies and turmoils.—[From "Life of Venizelos," by S. B. Chester (Doran.)

NEW CENTURY BOOKS.

The Century Company will begin publishing its autumn list in August, when the following books will be issued: "Quin," a novel by Alice Hegan Rice; "A Man's Game," a story of Latin America, by John Brent; "The Fruits of Victory," by Norman Angell; "The American Railroad Problem," by I. Leo Sharfman, and "America's Power Resources," by C. G. Gilbert and J. E. Pogue.

An Illustration in "Loafing Down Long Island."

POET GOES A-ROAMING.

LOAFING DOWN LONG ISLAND. By Charles Hanson Towne. The Century Company, New York.

In his latest book, which is in prose—mostly, Charles Hanson Towne describes a delightful series of walking trips down Long Island with all the humor and the charm which the experiences had for him—and should have for his readers. "Loafing Down Long Island" is a book extremely attractive to the eye. It is embellished by a series of delicate line drawings by Thomas Fagarty, in which the artist has caught the veritable "feel" of Long Island.

The following encounter with the pretty librarians is one of the thousand of delightful adventures of the road of which Mr. Towne tells:

Two young ladies had a table near us, and I gathered from such scraps of their conversation as came to us that they were librarians, out on a jaunt also, but in a car. They left the room first, and Ernest and I, sitting by the window, could see them as they stepped into the smallest insect of the road I have ever beheld—nothing, literally, but a child's express wagon, with a homemade attachment in the nature of a steering wheel, and a mysterious little engine concealed somewhere which caused the wagon to vibrate down the road. They rattled off, their tiny suit case on the back, as happy, apparently, as we. They saw our patronizing smiles as they went down the path, and smiled back good-naturedly, not at all flirtatiously. I suppose they guessed we were laughing at their makeshift conveyance, but they had the air of being used to that sort of thing and seemed not a whit embarrassed at what we thought.

An hour or so later, riding in a fine motor because we had dared to ask a lift, we encountered these girls on the road. They had had engine trouble, and, recognizing us, blushed with mortification. I suppose they imagined we were in our own car, and we were just snobbish enough to like them to think so.

Our triumph was short-lived, however. Two miles or so farther on, our host dropped us, as he turned to the right and our path lay straight ahead. And it was not long before we heard a strange rattle behind us, and those gay librarians sailed by us, waving their handkerchiefs and calling out, "Say, who's lucky now?" It was we who were humiliated as they faded into the landscape, going, I should say, not fewer than twenty-five miles an hour in their homely little box car, like so much pretty freight. But just before they disappeared, and knowing, perhaps, that they would never see us again, one of them blew us a kiss—yes, fearlessly she did it, this prim librarian off on a summer holiday!

A DANCING SONG.

We have no use for the dance new and catchy,
We damn good sorts who slide up through the night,
We want the real moonlit waltz
named Apache,
Supple, seductive, quick, wicked and light!
Silently each chap grabs hold of his sweet one;
Then makes her skirt flirt the dirt to the moon;
Swiftly, abruptly he hands her a neat one;
Then comes the whirlpool tune—
La la la la la la la!

Friends, this is the Brown Waltz,
Plain girls and boys o' the town
waltz,
Come pick me up knock me down
waltz,
Where you solicit, and kiss it or miss it—
Oh, la la!
Yes, this is the Moon Waltz,
This is the laugh of the loon waltz,
Just try to kiss me too soon waltz—
Night!......and light!......and—
Ha-ha-ha!

Oh, this is the tune, friends!
We're Cavalieres of the Moon,
friends!
Each boy sweeps down like a loon,
friends,
Wild with moon-madness, moonbadness, moon-gladness—
Oh, ta ta!
Ah, you know the brown tune!
This is the talk o' the town tune!
This is the rip in the gown tune—
Dance!.....and trance!.....and—
Ha-ha-ha!

OCTOBER "YALE REVIEW."

With the October issue the Yale Review celebrates its tenth anniversary as a national quarterly. First among the contributors to the anniversary number is John Galsworthy, whose stirring message of idealism, "Castles in Spain," comes with especial force in these times. No less vigorous in its appeal to high principles is Bishop Edward L. Parsons's "Asia's Challenge to America," which sets against a moral background the Pacific question to be discussed at the disarmament conference. Dr. Stewart Paton exposes the fundamental error in "radical" psychology; Francis H. Sisson, vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company, writes of the present financial depression and the way out; and James J. Coale makes a powerful plea for a new policy in the Protestant churches.

Robert Frost contributes a narrative poem, "Maple," in his most characteristic vein; and Sara Teasdale, Edwin Arlington Robinson, and John Jay Chapman are represented by verse of high quality.

In honor of the six hundredth anniversary of the death of Dante, Benedetto Croce, the most distinguished critic in Italy today, pays an illuminating tribute to "the young Dante and the Dante of the Divine Comedy." Sir Harry Johnston, author of the "Gay-Dombeys," writes with great gusto and personal charm of the business of the novelist; Wilbur Cross outlines the art of biography "From Plutarch to Strachey;" Tucker Brooke presents an unconventional view of Shakespeare; and Chauncey B. Tinker recalls the pleasures of "the happy ending." Karle Wilson Baker describes with the insight and delicacy of a poet the birds of the South; and Howard Snyder sends from his Mississippi plantation a faithful and startling picture of Paradise Negro School.

Among the book reviewers in the October Yale Review are William Rose Benet, Prof. Allen Johnson, Stark Young, Dean Frederick J. E. Woodbridge, Dr. Knight Dunlap and Moorfield Storey. The scope of this section includes Bryce's "Modern Democracies," Amy Lowell and other poets, the Letters of William James, and important books on art, dramatic criticism, psychoanalysis, American plays, forestry, the Air Service, finance, naval history, Russian literature, and the work of Walt Whitman.

In addition, the editor contributes an interesting article on the policy and ideals of the Yale Review, which rounds out a number worthy to mark a historic milestone in its progress.

NEW HOMES FOR OLD.

Americanization from one of the most important and human of all angles—the immigrant's home-making—is authoritively treated by S. P. Breckinridge in her book just published by the Harpers, "New Homes for Old." Prof. Breckinridge points out that for the immigrant, the finding and making of a home means readjustment customs of food, dress, recreation and family relationship.

As professor of social economy in the University of Chicago, the author writes with an authority and insight which will make her book valuable to the social worker; as a woman, she describes the immigrant's problems with a sympathy and human interest which will appeal to the reading public at large. Her treatment of the foreign-born housewife is of extraordinary interest to those who wish to help the immigrant in the first steps of Americanization.

We first meet the immigrant wife and mother in connection with her problems of saving. We are informed of her many disadvantages—her unfamiliarity with American money; the irregularity of her income due to periods of unemployment and of the high cost of weddings, christenings, and fete days. We are also initiated into her problems of spending, for, according to Prof. Breckinridge, the expenditure for present needs as well as the saving for future wants, present special difficulties:

"The foreign-born housewife is handicapped by the kinds of places at which she must buy, because of language, custom, and time limitations, as well as the grade of article available. . . . The art of spending, too often neglected by her native-born sisters, takes on added difficulties for the untrained immigrant woman. . . .

"In the purchase of furniture and of clothing there is the temptation to buy on the installment plan. This plan is open to all the objections ordinarily brought against buying on credit. The superintendent of the Bohemian Charitable Association says, for example, that it is very common for newly married people to load themselves with debt for household furniture, and that at least two-thirds of the stoves which are commonly bought on the installment plan are taken back by the dealers before payments are finished. . . . Then there is the unsolved problem of clothing . . . The women at first find it difficult to judge of values and prices. . . . Certainly the foreign-born woman who undertakes to manage her family's affairs in an American community is confronted by no easy task. The question arises as to what can be done to make that task less difficult."

Prof. Breckinridge recommends in this regard many practical reforms for teaching the foreign-born woman the art of spending. She gives a comprehensive survey of what has already been done in this line, and offers constructive suggestions for repairing the mistakes of hitherto unsuccessful attempts at adjustment.

"New Homes for Old" is the sixth volume of the Harper Americanization Studies.

POET'S FIRST NOVEL.

The experiences in his "Beginning of Wisdom" were certainly variegated enough for the hero of Stephen Vincent Benet's first novel, which bears that title and will be published by the Holts September 29th. It begins with his idyllic birth in California and continues with an equally idyllic love experience at Yale. Then it progresses more rigorously to his deportation in Arizona with some "Reds," and his narrow escapes from a movie "vamp" and the World War, and ends up with love bringing him wisdom. The author, though but a little past 20, has already made a mark as a poet, and does not hesitate in this new book to switch off into verse when the spirit moves him. The Bookman was so taken with the beauty of the story that it has been issuing sections of it in advance of book publication.

MORE CHESTERTON.

G. K. Chesterton is at work on a new book dealing with his impressions of America and Americans, gathering during his recent visit here. Dodd, Mead & Co., expect to publish the book early next year.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

The London correspondent of the Publishers' Weekly reports among the nonfiction best sellers of the month Norman Angell's "The Fruits of Victory," George Bernard Shaw's "Back to Methuselah" and "Prejudices: First Series," by H. L. Mencken.

The authors of the best sellers are closing a busy season. In the late summer and early fall list of fiction are books by Gene Stratton Porter, Hall Caine, Harold Bell Wright, James Oliver Curwood, A. S. M. Hutchinson, Kathleen Norris, Ethel M. Dell, Owen Johnson and Peter B. Kyne; and there are yet to come new novels by Winston Churchill, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Ralph Connor and Jeffery Farnol.

Granville Barker's "The Madras House," which never has been presented in this country, will open the eighth season of the Neighborhood Playhouse, New York, in the near future. "The Madras House" is published by Little, Brown & Co.

"The Craft of Fiction," an analysis of the art of making novels, by Percy Lubbock, the British critic, who was the editor of "The Letters of Henry James," is one of the forthcoming publications of Charles Scribner's Sons.

J. D. Beresford, whose daring novel, "Revolution," has received extensive notice in England and America, is one of those men of letters in London who find time to advise publishers of worth-while books. He devotes one day a week to discovering promising young authors for Messrs. Collins & Co. Frank Swinnerton does the same for Chatto & Windus, and Michael Sadleir for Constable & Co.

The Periodical, issued by the Oxford University Press American Branch, announces among forthcoming books, "New Chapters in the History of Greek Literature"—recent discoveries in Greek poetry and prose of the fourth and following centuries B. C., edited by J. A. Powell and E. A. Barber; the first volume (to A.D. 313) of "A History of the Church to A.D. 461," by B. J. Kidd; and lectures by Sir Graham Balfour, entitled "Educational Administration."

Books on the South Seas still continue to attract public attention. The Malay Archipelago is the locale of "Where the Strange Trails Go Down," a book by E. Alexander Powell soon to be published by Charles Scribner's Sons. Here Mr. Powell describes his adventures and observations on a trip which took him to Mindanao, Jolo, Borneo, Bali,

CRITICAL AND BIOGRAPH

ERNEST RENAN. By Lewis Freeman Mott. D. Appleton & Co., New York and London.

Renan humanized Jesus and wrote one of the greatest biographies in the annals of literature. He added German intensity of research to a Gallic temperament and cultivated a style that is as smooth and insidious as a one-time legalized article of commerce long mellowed in the wood.

The tumult and the shouting have died; Renan has come into his own. He was a gentle skeptic; a modern son of light and tolerance. Others were intolerant; he pursued his way with equanimity to fame and has conquered the world by virtue of patience.

Mr. Mott is not sympathetic. On the other hand he has no ax to grind. The result is a book that shows the man Renan and his work as one and the same; a volume that is four-square with the facts. Mr. Mott holds no brief for Renan; on the other hand he owes naught to those who still cherish a tradition of divine intervention at stated periods in the affairs of man.

It was within himself that Renan sought material for the "Life of Jesus," "The Origins of Christianity" and "the History of the People of Israel." The results is a Gallic Jesus, a temperamental progress of the people of Israel from semi-barbarism to leadership in religious thought for a fair half of the children of our common garden parents.

Though modern research has added much to the material that Renan assembled in his various books, and the searchlight of truth has played long upon the summit wherein is set the holies of holies, Renan still remains the best exemplar of the human in religion. In his books we walk with the fathers over the hills of Palestine, we listen-in on bated conversation regarding our ultimate destiny to be consumed of fire, and are told by Renan that it is not so and the why. Renan was a skeptic with a difference, for he reassures, whereas Voltaire and others pulled down the pillars of faith and left us lamenting in a cold world where the worm looketh upward to corruption and man laboreth in sorrow.

Jesus also has been metamorphosed. Love has leavened the lump. He no longer breathes hell fire and damnation; he is no longer a Calvanistic cross between a democ of fury and [illegible] a high, cold [illegible] church all the [illegible] of censorship [illegible] Renan has made [illegible] own image.

The Wasted Generation
By Owen Johnson

"The man who has the courage to write down day by day the true record of his life, concealing nothing, excusing nothing, without attempt to reconcile the irreconcilable, putting down the sublime with the ridiculous, the mud that soils his feet as he contemplates the stars, the struggle, the inconsistencies, the little basenesses, the hypocrisies that make him virtuous—that man who will dare arraign himself before the pitiless bar of his own judgment—will leave an immortal book—but no one has ever confessed and no one ever will."

Quoted is the remark which inspired the writer into attempting just such a genuine book. All the little vanities, the selfishness, the courage and ambition that make man are here frankly chronicled, as he tells of his hero's many love affairs, his life in gay Paris, and his experiences during and after the war.

Perhaps the advanced code of morals advocated may surprise, even shock, many people. But assuredly it will make them think! Priced at $2.00.

alone make it well worth while to read "Dangerous Ages."

"Ten Hours."

A quite unusual novel is "Ten Hours" by a new English writer, Constance L. Smith. Superficially it is the account of ten hours of an English housewife's day. But the author crowds into these ten hours the crisis in the life of more than one of the characters, and this she does quite simply and altogether without melodramatic effect. The book is of the coldly realistic type, reminding one now and then of Evelyn Scott's "The Narrow House," but broader in conception and less disagreeable in execution. Penetrating vision, a rare gift of selection, and a deep sense of the tragedy that lies in the seemingly commonplace are all here, with a sureness of touch that should insure an attentive reading public for the work of this author.

"Mrs. Farrell."

Lovers of Howells will read with pleasure "Mrs. Farrell," an early novel that came out years ago in the Atlantic Monthly, but for some reason was never put in book form before. It is a characteristic Howells novel, with rich undercurrent of humor and character delineation that is a joy to those who like serious fiction in which the action is of little moment, the psychological reactions holding the interest.

"The Empty Sack."

Basil King's "The Empty Sack" is no ordinary novel. In it the author shows his interest in social problems, even while he weaves a story that is full of romance and of action of the more serious sort. Mr. King can always be trusted to write seriously and well, which is another way of saying that his popularity is deserved. If his novels are a little too heavily loaded with a thesis, they are at least provocative of thought.

"Erik Dorn."

A first novel that is creating no little stir is "Erik Dorn," by Ben Hecht. It is one of those ultra-modern pieces of realism, brilliant in spots, ugly and even disgusting as often as not, but having virility and enough truth to a certain kind of life to give it substance. Those who like Cabell and his sort will greet Mr. Hecht's first essay into fiction. Our friend Mencken thus describes "Erik Dorn" in the October Smart Set: "Superficially, it seems to be the story of a young husband's revolt against domestic normalcy; actually it is the chronicle of a sensitive soul's anomalistic reactions to the whole phantasmagoria of modern civilization—the spiritual knee-jerks of a genuine original."

"If Winter Comes."

One of those books that everybody is bound to read sooner or later is "If Winter Comes" by A. S. M. Hutchinson. It has action, romance and a dramatic quality that hold the interest tensely to the last page. It is none of your cheap claptrap, but a worth-while book of high motive power.

"The Mater of Man."

"The Haster of Man," Hall Caine's most recent novel, is frankly melodramatic, avowedly a novel with a "moral," and, the critical-minded may well say, an anachronism in an age of cold realism. Despite its faults, and it has many, it has the power to hold the attention. Hall Caine is highly dramatic; he knows how to make his situations tense, and he has no scruples as to the methods he employs in the accomplishment of his purpose.

Other new novels that promise to be of some moment are W. L. George's "Ursula Trent;" Jeffrey Farnol's "Martin Conisby's Vengeance;" Owen Johnson's "The Wasted Generation," and John Buchan's "The Heritage of the King."

Joseph Hergesheimer's now famous lecture at Yale on "The Female Nuisance in Literature," was one of the Francis Bergen Foundation lectures. The Francis Bergen Lecture Foundation was founded at Yale in 1919 in memory of a brilliant young Yale graduate and provided for four lectures a year, three on literature and one on science. The only stipulation is that the lecturers shall be indisputably of the first rank. In 1919 the three literary lectures were given by Yeats, Hugh Walpole and St. John Ervine; in 1920, by John Galsworthy, Joseph Hergesheimer and Miss Amy Lowell. The Hergesheimer lecture caused such a sensation and attracted so many women that 500 additional seats were immediately afterwards installed and reserved for undergraduates exclusively.

"America's Norse Discoverers" is the title given to a translation, and discussion, by G. M. Gathorne-Hardy of the Wineland Sagas, to be published immediately by the Oxford University Press American Branch. Apart from the fascinating problem of attempting to locate on the map the various parts of the American continent visited by the first explorers, the historic value of the evidence, has been the subject of the most varied estimates.

A book of the first importance is announced for the immediate publication by B. W. Huebsch, Inc. This is the translation of Dr. Herman Brinckmeyer's biography of Hugo Stinnes, containing the first authoritative information about this remarkable man for American readers. The book is important, not merely because Stinnes is one of the most powerful men in Europe at the present time; its significance derives mainly from the fact that the present industrial situation in Germany and the immediate future of German industry and German politics is largely in the hands of this one man.

Whiting Williams, author of "What's on the Worker's Mind," has a new book entitled, "Full Up and Fed Up." It is an account of his experiences as a laborer in the mines, steel plants and shipyards in Great Britain during the summer of 1920. It will be published in October.

Ben Hecht of Chicago, whose recently published book, "Erik Dorn," is a much discussed first novel, has another book complete in manuscript which no publisher has ever seen. At one time Mr. Hecht mailed it to New York, and then telegraphed the publisher imperatively to return the package unopened. "Thinking it over, I realized it wasn't just right," says Hecht. "They wanted to buy it, but I wanted to keep it. Two years' more work and it will be ready." In the meantime the manuscript of "Gargoyles" is nearing completion, and the book will be published by Putnams in 1922.

Percy Hammond, who recently migrated from the Chicago Tribune to its New York namesake, confesses in the October Bookman the Chicago dramatic critic's real attitude toward New York:

"A malignant envy withers his arteries. He writes in derision of New York City, compiling columns of scorn and sneers to prove that it is ignoble both as a place of residence and as a headquarters of the theater. He ransacks the glossary of anathema for new terms of sly opprobrium with which to express his contempt for the metropolis. The footnote, habitual to the playbills, 'Time, the Present; Place, New York,' engenders within him a dull choler; and he sees red when the advertisements in Chicago announce 'The Original New York Cast,' and republish the obnoxious opinions of Heywood Broun of New York instead of his own complimentary decrees. In his heart he knows that his feelings are but the bitter fruit of jealousy; and he explains that were it not for his books, his rostrum engagements, his pet charities, and the difficulty in making new enemies at his time of life, he would abandon Chicago's arid theater plains and set out for the fertile gardens and billowy fields of Broadway."

Marie Conway Oemler's publishers have made the discovery that "readers who like Dickens also like Mrs. Oemler's fiction; it has the great gift of tenderness, of laughter and of irresistibly stimulating vitality"—so they say. "Slippy McGee" was certainly a good story but it is as far from Dickens as it is from Shakespeare.

"The Outline of History" has appeared in a new one-volume edition. Of this edition the publishers say:

"Answering the enthusiastic praise as well as the constructive criticism of scholars and reading public, Wells has re-examined every page of his book, correcting and modifying, but sacrificing neither the fascinating style nor the magnificent sweep of his general plan.

H. C. Witwer, author of "From Baseball to Boches," whose new book of prize-fight romance the Putnams have just published, has moved from New York to Los Angeles, where he will make his home.

"The Americanization of Edward Bok" has now appeared in fifteen editions in three countries—the United States, England and the Netherlands. There have been ten printings in the United States; of these, the eighth, ninth and tenth have sold at the three-dollar price which was announced by the Scribners as soon as the original expense of publication had been met.

Marguerite Wilkinson's New Voices was a new idea in anthologies, a critical anthology, holding an open door to the new poetry, to poets and poetry lovers alike. The London Spectator spoke of it as "the most remarkable body of criticism of modern poetry and perhaps of poetry in general that has yet appeared."

The new edition, now published by the Macmillan Company, is revised and enlarged to include a new postscript, with instances of the most important poetry published since the book was written, and comments.

Mrs. Wilkinson recently visited the home of her ancestors where used to be quarried the Bluestone, which was the theme of her last book of verse. It is a most interesting old house, now occupied by her cousin, Mr. Poultney Bigelow.

NEW SERIAL FOR BOYS.

James Willard Schultz, whose books, "My Life as an Indian," "The White Blackfoot," and other Indian stories have enjoyed a wide circulation, has just completed a very interesting story for boys, "Seizer of Eagles," which begins serially in the September issue of the American Boy magazine.

The story as written by Mr. Schultz is told just as he had it from a real Indian. It's the story of a real boy, alive with action and compact of thrilling and fascinating adventure.

The Indian's strange customs and training, his ambitions and ideals, are marked by a strange religious feeling. Strange as this religion is—with its worship of the sun, its mysterious ceremonies, its reverence for nature and "sacred" animals, its dreams and visions—you will feel in the story, "Seizer of Eagles," that something in the Indian nature and training develops bravery and self-control and loyalty.

The boy of this story learns these in the ordeals he undergoes to realize his dream of becoming a "seizer of eagles"—a position greatly respected in the tribe and won only by a rigorous training, prowess and bravery.

TRANSLATION OF THOREAU.

A French translation of Thoreau's "Walden" is being made by Louis Fabulet. This is the first time that Thoreau's classic has been translated into French, although two German editions have already been made. This is to be published next fall in book form by the Nouvelle Revue Francaise in Paris. One or two installments have already appeared in the Revue de Paris.

WOMEN'S WORK AND WOMEN'S CLUBS.

BY MYRA NYE.

Mrs. A. S. Lobingier, president of the Friday Morning Club, announced that an occasion was coming Tuesday at the reception when she was going to do a great deal of talking without thinking. This, as every member of the club knows, will be a phenomenon and well worth going far to see or hear.

"Our three parlors downstairs will be devoted to tea drinking and eating; program and 'uplift' and talking without thinking or uplift. I look forward to being in the latter room, as I get tired on club days of doing so much talking and thinking," said Mrs. Lobingier. "Each one of you may choose whichever room appeals to you and bring one guest," she added.

Mrs. Lobingier also announced the program for the regular meeting this week, a business one with the important consideration of building, and many other things to be acted upon. "If you stay away you give your silent assent to the majority and must then take your medicine and look pleasant whatever happens," Mrs. Lobingier said.

At the drama committee luncheon Tuesday, when Mrs. J. Wells Smith will preside, the subject will be "Provincetown Players and Two Provincetown Plays." Gertrude Workman and read "Aria da Capo," a fantasy by Edna St. Vincent Millay. Helen Taggart Pole will read "The Widow's Veil," a comedy, by Alice Rostetter. The story of the Provincetown Players will be given by Mrs. May W. Goldman.

George H. Hecke, director of the State Department of Agriculture, will take as his subject "Farm Production and City Prosperity."

C. C. Teague, president of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, will speak on "Problems in Connection With Transportation and Distribution."

Nonmembers may obtain guest tickets admitting them to the program.

Benefit Card Party.

There will be a benefit card party for the Lark Ellen Home for Boys, November 9, at 2 p.m., to raise funds to erect a new building. There will be 300 tables and a prize for each table, a plan which is an innovation at large card parties and which it is hoped will save the confusion that has hitherto resulted.

Officers for the coming year are: President, Mrs. Judson C. Rives; vice-president, Mrs. Thomas Okey; recording secretary, Miss Georgella Lay; financial secretary, Mrs. Kenneth B. Wallace. The members of the honorary board are: Ellen Beach Yaw Cannon, Mrs. Leafie Sloan-Orcutt and Carrie Jacobs Bond.

The club will meet for the usual sewing in the morning.

Photoplay Wrights.

What is declared to be an interesting program is outlined for next Monday's meeting of the Photoplaywrights at their clubroom on the eighth floor of the Brack-Shops.

Last Thursday the members visited the Superba Theater to witness Frank Mayo's performance of the fighting parson in "Go Straight" and incidentally to hear the initial singing of a song, written by Miss Evelyn McKinney, one of the members.

Monday evening the picture "Go Straight" will be discussed and criticised. Stories by the members will be read.

Visitors will be welcome, it is announced.

Pomona Ebell Club.

Pomona Ebell Club entered upon its nineteenth year the 14th inst. It has in prospct a season of great activity and usefulness, a year in which club standards are perhaps higher than ever before and one in which there will be opportunity for women to engage in worth-while endeavors along many lines.

The club year formally opened with a meeting of the executive board at 10 a.m. followed by a 1 o'clock luncheon, served by the recital section in charge of Mrs. L. W. Pierce, and at which 150 members were seated. Between the luncheon hour and the regular afternoon program current events were presented by Mrs. Seward A. Simons of Los Angeles, former president of the Friday Morning Club. At the program proper, which began at 2:30 p.m., Mrs. W. A. McCormick appeared for the first time in the capacity of president. A musical program was presented by Raymond Harmon, Charles T. Ferry and Esther Rhodes, a trio of Los Angeles artists. One hundred new members and the organization of two new sections, one for the study of child psychology and the other interior decoration, were announced.

Whittier Woman's Club.

Once each year members of the Whittier Woman's Club are hostesses to their husbands or men friends, and on Thursday evening the clubhouse was the scene of an assembly which taxed the capacity of the large auditorium, and other social rooms. A short program of music and interpretative dancing was given. The artists appearing were Miss Viola Wasterlain, violinist; Miss Kathleen Shippen, pianist; Mr. Victor Carly, baritone; Miss Dorothy Wright, interpretative dancer, with music by Harry Wheaton Howard. Miss Shippen, who has passed many years abroad studying music, gave a historic setting for the musical numbers which followed. Miss Dorothy Wright's dance, "Child Chasing a Butterfly," was followed by "The Rose." Victor Cady was in excellent voice and his numbers were warmly received. Miss Viola Wasterlain is a very youthful violinist, who gives much promise of attaining artistic heights.

East Whittier P.-T. A.

Elaborate plans are being made by the East Whittier Parent-Teacher Association for a Halloween party to be given at the school-house the latter part of the month. After the business meeting a short program was presented and later the members and guests remained for refreshments and a social hour.

St. Matthias Guild.

Wednesday Afternoon Club.

Club women of Alhambra and their friends, including professional men of the city, heard Dist.-Atty. Woolwine discuss "Barriers to Law Enforcement," at the Wednesday Afternoon Club this week. Under the auspices of the club Miss Olga Steeb will appear in a piano recital, Saturday evening, November 12. Forty new names have been added to the membership list since the opening day.

City Teachers' Club.

Tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock the City Teachers' Club will hold their membership meeting when the third of a series of lectures on "Children's Books" will be given by Miss Marion Horton, director of the Los Angeles Library School.

Placement Department.

In these days, when unemployment is a serious national problem, the work of the vocational guidance and placement department of the California Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs is important. The bureaus managed in Southern California by this department do not operate for profit. No fee is charged either to the employer or employee.

There is a representative of the department in each club in the State and in many clubs a vocational committee has been formed to extend the local work. Placement bureaus have been established in San Francisco, San Diego, Sacramento and Pasadena. The work originated in Pasadena under the direction of Miss Winifred M. Hausam.

There is a research department in each bureau which co-operates in the study of business conditions affecting women and in the development of opportunities in new fields of work. A detailed record of the personality, education, training and reference of each registrant is kept on file and the Pasadena bureau has received the highest commendation from business men for this work.

"A vocational bureau such as you direct has a distinct place in the civic life of this community," said one of the leading business men, and the record made during the first six months speaks well for its future possibilities with a larger field and proper co-operation.

"A Vocation Bureau for Los An- Angeles County Federation of Business Women Wednesday the entire time for discussion is to be given to "A Vocation Bureau for Los Angeles." The meeting will be held at 6:30 p.m. at 616 South Hill street.

Mrs. Herbert A. Cable, deputy State labor commissioner, will be one of the speakers. The others: C. R. Helter, employment manager of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, and Harold J. Stonier, instructor in the college of commerce and business administration, University of Southern California. Reservations for dinner may be made with Miss Jane Humphreys, Pico 20.

Gleason Parliamentary Club.

After an executive session the Gleason Parliamentary Club will hold its first meeting of the year at the home of the president, Mrs. I. W. Gleason, 1110 West Thirtieth street, Saturday, at 2 p.m.

A short address of welcome by the president will be followed by "Vacation Echos" from those who have met with unusual experiences or traveled through foreign countries and seen wonderful sights during the summer. Mrs. Harry Culver will recall incidents of her trip to Europe and tell of present conditions. Miss Ida Iversen will enlighten the members along educational lines as demonstrated at Honolulu, and Mrs. Georgiana Townsend will tell of her impressions of the Press Congress of the World held at Honolulu.

Other members will give one-minute echos each of their happy vacations. Parliamentary practice, led by Mrs. Fred H. Fuller, will be followed by a social hour under supervision of Mrs. Harry Shultz, chairman of hospitality.

Wa Wan Club.

Sol Cohen, violinist, played before the Wa Wan Club last Wednesday in the Alexandria ballroom. Others who appeared were Elinor Remick Warren, pianist; Anne Howell, soprano, and Ester Rhodes, harpist.

A reception for active and affiliated members was held last Monday in the Wellington Apartments, when the program was given by Nellie Colburn Walker, soprano; Anna Laimer; contralto; Mrs. Hennion Robinson, Minnie O'Neal, Agnes Osborne Carter, Mrs. Henry Dabney and Colburn Walker. A tea and social hour followed.

Yesterday the students' auxiliary of the club held its first reception and program at the Los Angeles Art Center. All arrangements were made by the students.

South Side Ebell.

What promises to be an unusually attractive program has been arranged for the South Side Ebell for October 27. Dr. Leslie Learned of Pasadena is scheduled to speak on a question closely connected with the citizenship work planned for the year, his subject being: "What is Americanism?" On the same day Marian Tracie Whiting will present one of the living picture reproductions so popular last year. Reproductions will be given once each month, the subject for the first one being "The Mother," by Whistler, posed by Mrs. F. White, one of the older members of the club and the mother of twelve children. Mrs. Whiting will also give a resume of Friml's high jinks of modern opera, singing the Bubble song and Ting-a-Ling numbers. Club editors of the Los Angeles newspapers will be honor guests at a Halloween luncheon following the program. This luncheon will be prepared by a committee under the chairmanship of Mrs. Mary Finley. The committee consists of Mmes. Alice Alber, G. Carroll, Mary De Moss, R. Daniel, M. Allen, L. Chapman, F. J. Decker, C. Beckwith, J. W. Calvin, R. Cole, G. Catlin, F. Crodle, M. Altman, F. J. Atkinson and L. Colwell.

The activity of the club at the beginning of the year is gratifying. Without carrying on any special membership drive, nearly sixty new members have been added to the roll. Mrs. D. C. Pence has been elected recording secretary to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Beatrice Casson, who will move to Arizona. Mrs. J. Rennie was appointed chairman of the Year Book, which will be out early in November. The by-laws of the club were amended raising the initiation fee from 50 cents to $2, to take effect November 1.

At its last meeting the club enjoyed a group of readings by Jessie Y. Kimball and a talk on child welfare by W. G. Holland, chief probation officer of Los Angeles county, while Mrs. H. V. Wurdeman of the Badger Club told of her work with the disabled veterans.

Friday a large number of the rambler section, with their curator, Mrs. M. Spafford, visited the Hauser Packing Company and the Technical Glass Company.

Rest Cottage.

At the last meeting of the Ebell Club, which sponsors and directs Rest Cottage, Mrs. C. H. Toll, president, made the request that some one who had a house that was a white elephant on the hands of the owner give it to the Rest Cottage Association, as it is sadly in need of new quarters to adequately carry on the work. Seven new life members were added to the association.

Thursday a purpose luncheon was given at the cottage, when Mrs. Edward North told of the work and its needs. The luncheon was given by the scholarship and practical relief committees in conjunction with the Rest Cottage Committee. Dr. Lillian F. Titcomb of the State University, Southern Branch, spoke in behalf of the former and Dr. Carl Patton of the First Congregational Church spoke for the latter.

Los Angeles Browning Club.

Beginning its tenth year by an afternoon devoted to the influence of the Greek upon Browning's poetry, the Los Angeles Browning Club met at the home of Mrs. Dr. Allison Gaw, 1915 Cordova street. The president voiced her pleasure at having so many present, all prepared for a club year of study of Browning and the literature of Greece. She then gave a comprehensive resume of the subject of the day, showing that the great poet was steeped in the Greek classics almost from an infant.

After two contralto solos by Mrs. Samuel Marsten, Miss Ruth W. Brown of the University of Southern California showed that as a lover of the classics Browning did not altogether agree with Carlyle's dictum that Greece gave the modern world all its beauty.

Over the tea cups the ladies extended felicitations to Dr. and Mrs. Gaw over their new home, and hoped that their many college, club and other social activities might often center therein.

Los Angeles Ebell.

Miss Aline Barrett Greenwood will address Ebell of Los Angeles at the regular meeting tomorrow. She has made a name for herself in San Francisco and Oakland by giving lectures on current topics. Her subject will be "The Islands of the South Seas." At the Wednesday luncheon Mrs. Fannie Addison Pitt, a well known actress of the old school, will tell of her work. Miss Antonette Ruth Sabel, an appointee of the Federal government, working under the Chamber of Commerce for the betterment of community music, will speak on "Industrial Music." Dr. Frederic T. Blanchard of the Southern Branch, University of California, will be the third speaker.

Miss Ruth A. Braur has resigned as secretary of the Ebell Juniors on account of entering the university and the office has been filled by Miss Elizabeth Ward. Another of the girls has changed her name, although there seems to be no change of position as far as the auxiliary is concerned—Miss Ora Crary, vice-president of the juniors, is now Mrs. Roy Pearson. On October 28 the juniors will meet with the practical relief committee from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Santa Monica Bay Club.

Bertha Fisk, who was Mary Magdalene in the Pilgrimage Play, heads a small cast of players who will put on "Around the Clock" at Santa Monica Bay Woman's Club tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, after which the usual social hour will be observed.

The annual fall festival will be held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, when excellent programs each afternoon and evening will supplement the large number and variety of exhibits being featured this year. Prizes are to be awarded for flowers and for different kinds of cooked foods, such as bread, cake and pie. Along the walls of the auditorium ten artistic booths, evenly spaced, will contain displays entered for advertising purposes by bay district merchants.

A doll booth, occupied by over 100 dolls of fascinating variety, will undoubtedly be the mecca of every mother and child entering the clubhouse during the three-day affair. These dolls were donated by club members and their friends, many of them having been sent from distant parts of the country by famous personages. In lieu of a doll Mrs. Warren G. Harding contributed an unusual picture of the White House, which is to be sold at auction.

Woman's Club of San Pedro.

Following a brief business meeting the Woman's Club of San Pedro enjoyed a delightful program at the clubhouse Tuesday afternoon at the second meeting of the season. Prof. B. R. Baumgardt gave an interesting talk on "Spain and the Alhambra," in which he emphasized the world's indebtedness to the Moors for much in philosophic thought, architecture, customs and art. Much was added to the enjoyment of his talk by colored stereopticon slides.

Little Mary Louise Larkin of Los Angeles entertained with dancing and harp selections. The afternoon concluded with a birthday tea, honoring the club members whose birthdays occur in October. Mrs. E. C. Stinson gave a toast and Mrs. F. W. Reynolds cut the birthday cake.

Girls' Corner Club.

At the Girls' Corner Club Tuesday night the rally was a fine index of the spirit of the club, and augured well for continued success throughout the winter. This was "business girls" rally, and business girls came 100 strong to enjoy the informal program and the hospitality of the club.

Mrs. Guy Bush organized a Girls' Corner Club Chorus of nearly fifty voices. Mrs. Frank A. Parsons, teacher of domestic science in the public schools, gives her services for the girls every Monday evening, teaching them to sew and make hats.

The officers of the club are: President, Zephnie Shannon; vice-president, Orline Brass; membership secretary, Ruth Ware; treasurer, Florence Bradney. All the club's activities are under the direction of Mrs. Frances L. Neth, and Dr. James Francis, pastor of the First Baptist Church, is godfather to the movement.

The social committee is composed of women prominent in welfare work in the city, as follows: Mrs. Florence Stewart, Mrs. B. H. Boren, Mrs. George Lyon, Miss Alice Alfred, Miss Portia Riley, Miss Eva Jessup, Mrs. Guy Bush, Miss Lillian Larabee, Mrs. Leon Darrow, Mrs. W. H. Wilson, Mrs. A. J. Jordan, Mrs. Hugh K. Walker, Jr., and Mrs. Robert Scott.

British Empire Daughters.

A bazaar will be given by the Daughters of the British Empire in America Saturday afternoon and evening in Garfield Hall, Walker Auditorium Building, 730 Grand avenue. Tea will be served in the afternoon and there will be fortune-telling, fancy work and pure food sales.

The hostesses will be Mrs. W. S. Ponsette, president of the State council; Mrs. Daniel Clark, Regent of the Queen Alexandria Chapter; Miss Isabel Macarthur, Regent of the Florence Nightingale Chapter; Mrs. Cary F. Fagge, Regent of the Princess Mary Chapter. In charge of the various booths will be: Fancy work, Mrs. R. W. Vincent; candy, Mrs. G. A. Charlton of Long Beach; Citrus fruits, Mrs. Horace Little, Ontario; white elephant booth, Mrs. Tracy Becker; tea, Mrs. Herbert Crickmer; pure food, Miss Evelyn MacArthur; fortune-telling, Miss Chessie Cameron; entertainment, Mrs. Margaret Hamm.

The bazaar is to be for the purpose of raising a fund for a home for British people in Southern California who otherwise would be homeless.

Mission Workers.

In view of the approaching conference in Washington to consider the limitation of armaments, the theme chosen for the meeting of the Women's Federation of Missionary Workers of Los Angeles last Tuesday, in the First Christian Church, was "On Earth, Peace." The address of the day was delivered by Rev. E. P. Ryland on "World Peace." Others who spoke were Mrs. G. H. Clark, Miss Winifred Rouzee, whose subject was "The Service of Consecration;" Rev. E. F. Daugherty and Mrs. W. H. Crabbe. Mrs. Alma Ross gave the musical program.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Mrs. W. S. Dysinger, president; Mrs. James D. Eaton, vice-president; Mrs. Nathan Newby, secretary.

Southwest Museum.

This year as last, women's clubs in the city and district are availing themselves of the hospitality extended by the directors of the Southwest Museum to visit that institution in a body. So popular were these meetings the past season that this year, for the convenience of visiting groups of women, a club kitchen has been installed and all-day sessions are now in vogue.

Dr. A. B. Comstock, curator of the museum, went before the V. J. Chapter of the P.E.O. Sisterhood of Whittier to speak on "Early California History" Tuesday, and Dr. Dane Tasker will speak on the missions at the same place November 1. Next May 16, at the time of the State convention of the P.E.O. in Los Angeles, that body of women will have an all-day session there and the federation extension secretaries are to enjoy the museum's hospitality November 10. On November 16 William McGinne will speak before the Wednesday Morning Club on "A Trip Through Navajo Land."

Mrs. Frances K. Headlee of the museum staff spoke on the work of the educational department and her own experiences overseas in Turkey and Greece last Wednesday at a luncheon session of the Reciprocity Club.

Lincoln Study Club.

"Early Grecian and Roman Writers" will be the topic of discussion Tuesday at a meeting of the Lincoln Study Club at the residence of Mrs. Dr. Curtis M. Beebe, 1106 West Forty-seventh street. Mrs. Ira Purl Fleming, vice-president of the club, will discuss "Early Greeks and Latins in Literature." Papers will be read including "Homer—Review of the Iliad and the Oddyssey," Mrs. Everett James, and "Virgil—Review of the Aeneid." Mrs. Gertrude Lang.

The club was recently founded by Mrs. Lucretia Cage of Santa Monica, formerly of Detroit, where she established the Lincoln Study Club of that city. Mrs. Dr. H. W. Spiers is secretary.

The avocado she holds weighs nearly four pounds and the tree on which it was grown is one of 150 planted, pruned, budded and cared for entirely by herself. Miss Wells recently was elected president of the Professional Woman's Club to take the place of Mabel Walker Willebrandt, resigned, to become a deputy Attorney-General of the United States. Los Angeles Travel Club.

American citizenship for native born as well as foreign born was discussed by Mrs. John C. Urquhart, president of the Los Angeles district, C. F. W. C., at the last meeting of the Los Angeles Travel Club. Mrs. Ellen French Aldrich, chairman of public affairs, who has just returned from New York, gave a resume of her trip. A letter from Mrs. Anne Faulkner Obendorfer, national chairman of music of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs, was read, urging that each one write to her Senator immediately, protesting against the passing of a bill for a tax on all musical instruments.

October 20 was travel day through the New England States and the following furnished the program: Mrs. F. W. Fuller, Mrs. Irving C. Harris, Mrs. Ella Cooper Keith and Mrs. Grace Gates.

Educational Center.

On Tuesday the members and friends of the Mothers' Educational Center will gather for lunch in the Red Room of the Men's City Club, Chapman Building, at noon. Plans for increasing the membership will be discussed, and the date set for the annual membership campaign. A report will be given by Mrs. A. R. Condit of the progress of the new division of correctional work. Many children have been examined by the center physicians who found defects due to improper development or nutrition, which could be eradicated through proper food and supervised exercise. At present there is no place in the city where a child can receive this help, so the plans were completed to make this a definite part of the Mothers' Educational Center program. Children of all ages will be taken.

Since the annual report of the president in June, 1032 babies have been examined and their mothers instructed in their care. Need for more centers in the city is apparent if service is given to all of the mothers seeking it. This is a community movement and anyone interested in saving children through parental education will be most welcome at the luncheon. Reservations should be made through Mrs. R. C. Richert, 1507 Ingraham street. Phone 52290.

Club Briefs.

At the regular Saturday afternoon tea yesterday of the Three Arts Club, Douglas Donaldson of the Otis Art Institute gave a talk on "Art in Everyday Life."

Mrs. Leona B. Thorpe of Nebraska was in the city Tuesday attending the meeting of the League of American Pen Women. She is the State president of this organization in Nebraska.

Miss Faith Chevaillier of the Woman's City Club and the Friday Morning Club, noted for her work among prisoners, is in charge of a drive to secure readable books especially for the young men from Los Angeles in San Quentin. There are more from this city than any other part of the State. Therefore Miss Chevaillier says it is only fair that most of the books come from this city. Tomorrow is the last day she can receive books. They may be left at the Woman's City clubroom in the Walker Theater Auditorium building, third floor.

Mrs. J. B. Stearns, president of the Woman's City Club, will be the chairman of a delegation from her club to meet with the Men's City Club Wednesday at 8 p.m. for a local conference on disarmament. Others appointed are Mrs. Frederick Hickok, Mrs. Robert T. Brain, Mrs. John T. Coleman and Mrs. Herman Darling.

To make arrangements for a mass meeting of women favoring disarmament, representative women from club circles will meet in the Women's University clubrooms, 805 Brack Shops, Tuesday at 2 p.m. Mrs. J. B. Stearns, Mrs. Shelley Tolhurst, Mrs. Arthur Heinemann, president of the Los Angeles County League of Women Voters, and Mrs. John C. Urquhart, president of the Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Club, are sponsors for the meeting.

Mrs. William Reed will be the toastmistress Wednesday at the Ebell Club guest luncheon.

A short program of the compositions of Ward Stephens, one of America's foremost song writers, will be given Thursday evening at the Union League Club after the dinner by the Society of American Music Optimists. Invitations to this interesting affair are issued by Miss Bessie L. Howell, secretary of the society.

The Pastime Clearinghouse, originated here by Gertrude Gilmour of New York, will be in operation by the latter part of November with an executive office and bureau for the receipt and disbursements of tickets to entertainments free, in the Brack Shops, the clubrooms of the Women's University Club.

Donna Shuster won the first prize offered by the California Art Club for the best figure painting hung at the exhibition by the club now on view at Exposition Park. Miss Shuster's study is "The Little Mother." Glinting with sunshine falling through the trees of an arbor upon the figure of a little girl is a child, holding in motherly fashion her favorite doll. The picture is full of charm and a sweet sentiment.

Mrs. W. B. Hunnewell, president of the Channel Club, presided at a luncheon, the first meeting of the year for the club, on Saturday, when Frank Keenan, veteran actor, was the guest of honor and spoke on "The Drama and its Content."

Miss Dora Louise Kirwin is directing the Lincoln Heights Community Players in their work on the Spanish play "Zaragueta," a two-act comedy by Miguel, which is to be given at two performances at Lincoln High School and Normal Hill.

GIVE A BABY SYRUP PEPSIN

Constipation, biliousness and like annoying ills will quickly disappear

A MOTHER is always anxious to give the safest and best medicine to a constipated baby, but is puzzled which to select. Let her decide by the ingredients on the package.

Every bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the formula printed plainly on the outside of the carton under the portrait of Dr. Caldwell, who wrote the prescription in 1892. You will find that it is a combination of Egyptian Senna and other simple laxative herbs with pepsin. It will not gripe the baby, and it is free from narcotics. A bottle sufficient to last a family several months can be had at any drug store, and the cost is only about a cent a dose.

While no one, young or old, need take a drastic purgative like salts or calomel, be especially careful what you give a child. Some contain minerals, coal tar and other drugs that might prove dangerous by over stimulating the intestines or depressing the heart. The ingredients of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin are recommended by the U. S. Pharmacopoeia.

WOMEN'S WORKS, WOMEN'S CLUBS.

November 10 and 11, for the benefit of the Children's Theater.

Mrs. Bessie Salms, president of the South Side Ebell Club, together with her executive board and club members, is arranging for an elaborate Halloween luncheon at the Vernon Branch Library at Forty-fifth street and Central avenue, Thursday. The program begins at 11 a.m.

With Mrs. C. W. Humphrey as hostess, La Camarada Club met Wednesday afternoon. Miss D. Christie gave an interesting talk of her personal experiences in Turkey, having lived there forty-three years. Mrs. Sidney Sprague, a native of Persia, now a resident of Los Angeles, was the guest of honor. The next meeting of the club will be with Miss Etta Bunnell, November 2.

James T. Britt of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, has issued an invitation for the Woman's City Club to send representatives to the convention to be held at Exposition Park Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Those selected besides the president, Mrs. J. B. Stearns, are: Miss Joy Bennett, Mrs. Frederick Hickok, Mrs. Paul Flammer, Mrs. Cora Deal Lewis, Mrs. Mollie Bloom Flagg and Mrs. H. C. Terrill. This is in line with the policy of women's clubs to ally their interests with the leading industries of the Southland during the year.

At the home of Mrs. Chester W. Brown, 919 West Adams street, the Los Angeles Chapter Daughters of the American Revolution will hold its meeting, November 2, at 2:30 p.m. Mrs. Charles S. Crail is regent.

The chief efforts during the current year of the Lamanda Park Woman's Club will be directed to the building of a new clubhouse, for which purpose a citizen has donated a lot in one of the best sections of the district. A Woman's Club Building Association has been formed, and the work of raising funds has progressed so far that the erection of a home is assured for the near future.

Mrs. Howard Sherwood, president of the Ramona Park Woman's Club, reported a waiting list of twenty-five for membership, in the club at the first meeting. The meeting was a particularly happy one, as it was the opening of the new clubhouse, and the guests of honor were Mrs. John C. Urquhart, president of the district, and several members of her executive board.

Plays chosen for reading and study by the drama section of the Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale for the season are: "Quality Street," Barrie; "The Blue Bird," Maeterlinck; "The Importance of Being Earnest," Oscar Wilde; "The Sins of David," Stephen Phillips; selected plays by Racine; "Mary Stuart," John Drinkwater; "School for Scandal," Sheridan; "Miss Lulu Bett."

Zona Gale; reviews of Broadway productions: "Deburau," "Liliom," "Beyond the Horizon."

Mrs. A. J. Smith, chairman of the books and magazines section of the Averill Study Club, had charge of the program for the meeting Tuesday. Community singing was led by Mrs. B. F. Nance; Mrs. Lucy Holmes Adams reviewed recent books, and Mrs. Nance read an original poem, "Magazines as I See Them," in which she used the names of forty-two magazines. Mrs. Torry T. Omdalen gave a short original poem on "The Brimming Cup."

Mrs. E. B. Weirick will speak on the work of the Big Sisters' League at the Echo Park Mothers' Club Friday at 11 a.m. The meeting is under the direction of the social-service chairman, Mrs. Charles B. Cates. Miss Hortense Williams will direct the gymnasium before the program, and Mrs. L. C. Miller will play piano numbers.

Mrs. E. K. Foster of the Juvenile Protective Association will be the speaker before the Sierra Madre Club the 24th inst. A Halloween party will be given the evening of the 28th by the club, when prizes for the best costume and the funniest will be given. Reciprocity day for this club is December 12.

Miss Florence Bischoff, president of "Sociatas," entertained the members of the organization at tea yesterday afternoon. Plans for the new school year were discussed and a woman's tennis team was organized. The membership of this club is composed of the women students of the College of Law, Univerity of Southern California.

The Music Teachers' Association took action at its meeting Monday afternoon, protesting against the proposed tax on musical instruments.

At the first meeting of the year for the Pasadena Chapter, D.A.R., Mrs. R. C. SEE TURKS AS MENACE TO WORLD.

Near East Relief Workers Tell of Atrocities and Ask Aid for Armenia.

Again and again has the cry come across land and water to save the Armenians who are being destroyed by the Turks. Wednesday, at a conference of the Near East Relief Committee in the Y.M.C.A. Building, presided over by Justice Wilbur of the State Supreme Court, director for California, and attended by 200 men and women, a new note of danger was sounded.

"The greatest religious war of the ages is now in process of fomentation," said Dr. John W. Mace of New York, national field director o the Near East Relief. "There is only one thing that can prevent it. Armenia is the one Christian wedge between Mohammedan Turkey and Mohammedan East India. Armenia alone can save us from this monumental catastrophe. Even now these Mohammedans are planning to unite against the infidels of the whole world. Armenia must be saved! This is America's great opportunity to save the peace of the world by saving the lives of Armenian boys and girls who are now the only hope of that nation.

Dr. Mace and Dr. A. C. McCrae also from New York, returned in September to America after an extensive survey of conditions in the Near East. They drew vivid word pictures yesterday of the suffering. Both told of the dead wagons they saw each day in Alexandrianople going through the streets and picking up an average of 100 per day of those who had died from starvation.

Miss Evelyn Trostle of Los Angeles, who was in Turkey during the massacre last January of 12,000 persons, told of the Turkish atrocities.

Justice Wilbur announced the receipt of a cablegram yesterday from Derindje near Constantinople telling of the safe arrival of supplies sent from Los Angeles Harbor to the starving in that section.

Those who told of the Armenians' needs included Dell A. Schweitzer, Rev. O. J. Ryder of Glendale, Dr. Mace and Dr. McCrae of New York, Frederick L. Bird of Occidental College, M. B. Irvine of Long Beach; Charles T. Parnell, Misses Mabel Farrington, Evelyn Trostle, Rev. E. Guy Talbott, F. L. Simms, Elise Truran and Irene Eldred.

Her Stomach Made Her Nerv

Was Nervous 12 Years Due to Gas on St

"For 12 years I suffered from gas on the stomach and was nervous and short of breath. Adlerika (intestinal antiseptic) is fine—it has done me more good than anything. Words cannot express my gratitude." (Signed) Lela Cook.

Intestinal Antiseptic.

There is now offered to the public a preparation having the DOUBLE action of an intestinal antiseptic and a COMPLETE system cleanser. This preparation, known as Adlerika, acts as follows:

It tends to eliminate or destroy harmful germs and colon bacili in the intestinal canal, thus guarding against appendicitis and other diseases having their start here.

It is the most complete system cleanser ever offered to the public, acting on BOTH upper and lower bowel and removing foul matter which poisoned the system for months and which nothing else can dislodge. It brings out all gasses, thus immediately relieving pressure on the heart. It is astonishing the great amount of poisonous matter Adlerika draws from the alimentary canal—matter you never thought was in your system. Try it right after a natural movement and notice how much more foul matter it brings out which was poisoning you. [illegible]

JAPAN'S ENVOY BARES SECRETS OF KIAOCHAU.

Says Kaiser and Witte Bamboozled Roosevelt and Founded Nippon's Distrust of Americans.

BY PATRICK GALLAGHER.
[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

Peking (China) Sept. 16.—Y. Obata, Japan's Minister in Peking, says it is the fault neither of his government nor of the Chinese government that the much-vexed Kiaochau question remains unsettled, a thorn between China and Japan and an obstacle to American Pacific peace.

"Then, whose fault is it?" I asked, eager to smoke out "the nigger in the wood-pile."

"Circumstances," came the quick, emphatic reply.

"But," I objected, "isn't Japan the master of circumstances in China?"

The minister shook his head. "No, indeed," he said; "in China, both Japan and China are the victims of circumstances over which they have no present control."

"Is that the candor of diplomacy, Mr. Minister, or the candor of fact?"

He answered my smile with a wan grimace. "I'm afraid I'm not a good diplomat," he said with apparent sincerity. "You see, these Chinese questions mean much to me. I am among my neighbors, my relatives. We Japanese cannot think of the Chinese as foreigners. Their fortunes, after all, are our fortunes, too."

"I see. So, as Japanese minister, you don't wish to blame the Chinese, even when they are really at fault?"

"No. That would not be a correct explanation. I feel sorry for them, of course. Who could fail to be sorry? But I dont hold them responsible for existing difficulties."

FOURTH FAILURE.

"Yet, Mr. Minister, four times since the signing of the Versailles Treaty, you, as the representative of Japan, have approached the Chinese government in efforts to settle the Kiaochau question? Isn't that so?"

"Yes, that is true."

"And, each time, to put it plainly, the Chinese have sidestepped?"

"They have not been able to act."

"Why?"

"Because of the weakness and instability of the government?"

"You think that the government officials would like to settle the matter?"

"I know they would, but they have to consider Chinese domestic politics."

"I thought Kiaochau was a foreign question—a matter between China and Japan. Isn't it?"

"Superficially, yes; but actually, no. It is very much a Chinese domestic matter, at present."

That seemed a new aspect of the Kiaochau question. I asked the Minister to explain it more in detail.

THE EXPLANATION.

"It is this way," he said. "The central government in Peking, to which all foreign diplomats are accredited, is in a very difficult position. Nothing that it may say or do can hope to satisfy any of the opposite the masses of the people, who feel, but do not reason; and the opposition elements, of course, use the Kiaochau question as a club with which to beat the central government."

"Are there not other influences preventing a settlement; foreign influences?"

"Undoubtedly. But these would be ineffective were it not for the helpless condition of the Chinese government."

"Isn't that helpless condition due more to foreigners than to Chinese?"

"The Chinese say and think so and some foreigners agree with them. It is a difficult matter to discuss."

SUSPICION COSTLY LUXURY.

"But a necessary matter, Mr Minister. Whether we like it or not, the Kiaochau question is one of the things that might go on costing Japan and America billions in armaments. So long as Americans are driven to think that Japan is sticking pins in China and grinning over China's squeals, there is always danger of trouble."

"You are quite right," said Mr. Obata. "Suspicion between Japan and America is a costly luxury."

"Why not try to remove it? Take this Kiaochau question, why not peel the bark off and get at the real 'rot' in the trunk? Why not tell Americans the whole story and leave them to judge for themselves?"

"Japan, always anxious to earn the good will of America, has done everything possible to clear away misconceptions."

"Many Americans don't think so. I like your people, as you know, and I don't think so."

"You think we have been keeping some things back?"

"Yes, I do. Many of the best American friends of Japan think the same thing. Mr. Minister, isn't it a fact that there can be no real Kiaochau settlement without cleaning up the South Manchurian question—without a real and thorough ratification of Chinese frontiers?"

Mr. Obata thought awhile before he answered: "As to the first part of your question, Japan has certainly done her best to make her position clear. As to Kiaochau, Japan is not anxious to strike a hard bargain with China. Quite the other way."

"Very true, but many Chinese and most Americans don't know that. Why not come out frankly and tell why and how Japan must be protected in South Manchuria?"

"That was done in the Consortium notes."

"Not in the way I mean, Mr. Minister, and long diplomatic notes are too dry reading for most people. Why not tell the whole story in straight, simple terms—give us a Japanese sample of 'open diplomacy'?"

BLAMES LI HUNG-CHANG.

After a little further persuasion, I succeeded in securing the following remarkable statement from the Japanese Minister to China:

"Both Japan and China have been the victims of circumstances, for many years. To understand the Chinese question, and Japan's relation to that question, the statesmen who will meet in Washington and the people of the western world must carry their minds back sixty and more years and realize that during all this time Japan and China have been confronted with problems that naturally grew out of their contact with the West.

"While China, for quite explainable reasons, hesitated and stumbled in her response to the western invitation, Japan boldly accepted an inevitable situation and tried to make the best of it. Wisely, our statesmen acted as a unit under the advice of America. For many years an American actually controlled Japan's foreign policy.

"China was not so fortunate. Then, as now, China was divided and therefore not proof against selfish promptings from foreign and native sources. Many Chinese lay most of their troubles at the feet of Li Hung-chang, the statesman whose policy brought about the first modern trouble between Japan and China, the war of 1894-1895. At that time, territorial annexation was a common consequence of war. An important part of the peace settlement of 1895 between Japan and China was the transfer of the South Manchurian peninsula from China to Japan. Japan had taken and occupied Port Arthur and the adjoining country. It was to remain in Japanese hands.

MADE SECRET TREATY.

"Li pretended to be quite satisfied with this. He signed the treaty. Immediately afterward, in Moscow, he made a secret treaty with the Russian Foreign Minister, Prince Lobanof. It was a secret Russo-Chinese alliance against Japan and it was Li's price for Russo-German-French intervention against Japan. Under a very insulting ultimatum, Japan was compelled to give up Port Arthur and the South Manchurian strip.

"At once, Russia stepped in and Germany took Kiaochau. The Russian railway was built cross Manchuria for war against Japan. That is now an established fact, thanks to the published correspondence between the Czar and the Kaiser and admissions by Count de Witte, Gen. Kuropatkin, Baron Rosen and other Russian statesmen, who knew what was going on behind the scenes. The Kaiser prompted the trouble over Korea. Japan paid for this intrigue in blood and in treasure. That was not all.

Y. Obata, Japanese minister at Peking since 1918.

"We now know that the defeat of Russia was more complete than was believed even by expert observers, in 1905. Outside a limited circle in Russia and Germany the internal collapse of Russia passed unsuspected. Had the war continued, the probability is that the Romanoff throne might have been overturned twelve years prior to 1917. The correspondence shows that the German Emperor was fully informed of this danger.

KAISER SATISFIED.

"The war against Japan originated by his yellow peril progaganda and persistent pressure upon the Russian ruler, had satisfied his purpose. The German frontier was free from the Russian danger, for the time, at least. Still, the future had to be safeguarded. Now, in one of his letters, the German Emperor lays bare the plot through which Japan was to lose the friendship of America, and Germany retain a source of friction between Russia and Japan. His references to your great President, Roosevelt, are far from complimentary. It is important to note how he incites the Czar to play upon American emotions. He says:

"'Roosevelt, as I know, owing to the innate American dislike to all colored races, has no special partiality for Japan, although England does her utmost to work upon American feeling in favor of the Japanese.'

"It was under such duplicitous inspiration that Count de Witte went to Portsmouth to negotiate peace with the Japanese envoys. Count de Witte, in his printed memoirs, admits how he used all his wonderful wits to bamboozle Americans and to stir up enmity in the United States against Japan and the Japanese. It was under these circumstances that the great American President was innocently induced to throw his influence into the scale against Japan in the writing of the Manchurian clauses. Suspicion between Japan and America originated at the Portsmouth conference. Is that what you had in mind?"

PROPOSED PARLEY.

"Yes, Mr. Minister. You have mentioned the points that I think Americans will be glad to have made clear to them. Now, isn't it a fact that a Chinese statesman, Mr. Liang Chih-chao, in 1913, proposed a rectification of the Chinese-Japanese frontier?"

"I think so, and have seen it stated in print; although I have no personal knowledge of it."

"So far as you know, was that inspired by Japan?"

"No, indeed; Mr. Liang, however, might tell you about that."

"I have discussed it with him, Mr. Minister, and he bears out what you say. He told me it was his own idea. Don't you think it a good idea?"

"It might not be a good idea, especially just now; this, irrespective of the rights or advantages in the matter, from China's as well as Japan's standpoint. We want the friendship of the Chinese. We will do nothing to hurt them. Of course we would like to come to a clear understanding about Japan's special economic and strategical position that is the natural outcome of her geographical propinquity to Manchuria and adjacent regions."

NATIONALIZATION NEEDED.

"Isn't the only fair and practicable solution of all these questions one that would recognize the inability of the Chinese to get strength, stability or unity until all the powers unite not just to mouth a principle but to put in practice a plan that would root out every foreign settlement, restore all to Chinese sovereignty, compensate individual powers for surrendered concessions, nationalize under Chinese sovereignty and actual government every port or particle of China now in alien hands and (to avoid friction between the powers and offense to Chinese pride) specialize and divide up the task of advising the Chinese reformed government, but making every such foreign official a servant of China and not of his own government?"

"There is a good deal in that suggestion. Like America, Japan is unalterably opposed to the internationalization of China. What China needs and is striving for, in her own way, is complete nationalization. It is proper and timely to avoid the danger of drifting into more serious international difficulties over China, but at all costs the friendly powers should avoid putting difficulties in China's way, however unconsciously. After all is said and done, China's efforts should not be too harshly judged. She is doing her best."

"And making a bad mess of things, Mr. Minister, largely because conflicting foreign impulses are pulling her this way and that?"

WANTS CO-OPERATION.

"Perhaps that is so. Japan and America should work together to ease her part in settling her own problems."

Mr. Obata impresses me as a man possessing a wonderful control over his emotions. He talks very quietly, as a rule. At this point in the interview, however, he treated me to a rapid-fire summary of Chinese modern handicaps. His eyes sparkled and it was impossible to miss the burning fervor that inspired him.

"Everything has been against them," he said. "It is all very well to talk of friendship for the Chinese, but what they need is inspiration to self-success. We had that from your Townsend Harris and others. Is it unreasonable or unnatural that we should cherish the ambition to repay and honor your good service to Japan by playing a similarly helpful part in China? That is the root of the whole matter. I tell you, the longer I live here in China the stronger am I convinced that the peace of the Pacific and of the world depends upon Chinese-Japanese brotherhood. What helps that, helps everything. What retards that, hurts and endangers us all. Is the western world big enough, spiritually, not to be jealous of a real and lasting Chinese-Japanese friendship?" Miss Margaret Bonfield, the secretary of the British Women Workers' Federation, started her career as a shop apprentice at the age of 14. She is an eloquent speaker and an organizing genius.

Miss Betty Casement, trained nurse and daughter of an English army officer, has crossed the sea to become doctor, dentist, nurse and general consultant for the settlements that dot sixty miles of the Newfoundland coast.

The only oriental country where women are permitted to legislate is China. One of the provincial parliaments formed after the republic was established—that of Canton—allotted ten seats to women, who are elected by the votes of their own sex.

In Turkestan every wedding engagement begins with the payment of a substantial consideration to the girl's parents. If the girl jilts her lover the engagement gift has to be returned unless the parents have another daughter to give as a substitute.

In Lapland the women have from time immemorial stood on an equal footing with the men of the community. The sexes have equal civil and moral rights and equally severe labor as the daily round.

In Sweden it is a popular custom for a bride to fill her pockets with bread, which she hands to every one she meets on her way to church. Every piece she disposes of is supposed to avert a misfortune.

In parts of the Tyrol the bride's mother gives her daughter what is known as the "tearkerchief," woven in fine linen, with which she is supposed to dry her eyes at the ceremony. Afterward she puts this away, and it is not used again until it is laid over her face when she is dead.

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

More than 1000 tons of free ice was distributed to poor mothers and children of Chicago through the Tribune free-ice fund this summer.

According to the report of the free ice department of the United Charities of Chicago, under supervision of Miss Gertrude Birkhoff, more than 1000 tons was distributed by fifty Christian and Jewish, Protestant and Roman Catholic, and nonsectarian hospitals, day nurseries, settlement houses, community centers, and other organization, as well as by the ten districts of the United Charities located in Chicago.

The largest single agency distributing free-ice coupons was the Juvenile Court pensions of mothers' department, which made use of coupons calling for more than 500,000 pounds. The Jewish Home Finding Society, Social Service Bureau, and Consumptives' Relief Society distributed a quarter of a million pounds. Another like amount was placed through the Roman Catholic settlements and day nurseries of the city, and Protestant and nonsectarion organizations disposed of the balance.

The municipal tuberculosis santorium distributed more than 100,000 pounds through its seven dispensaries.

With the coming of the summer vacation from school, more than 5,000,000 American boys and girls, members of the Junior American Red Cross, went forth to play, with happy knowledge of the fact that during the past year they have been responsible for the bettering of the living conditions of hundreds of unfortunate children overseas. One phase of Junior Red Cross work abroad has been the co-operation with the French government in the support of fifteen agricultural schools, where children are being taught scientific farming, and finding, as well, happiness and health.

The school farm of Belair, just one hour south of Paris, is typical of this back-to-the-land, out-in-the-sunshine movement which the Junior American Red Cross is fostering in its work abroad. The French farm school is an important factor in the solution of one of the big reconstruction problems, the recultivation of thousands of acres of land made idle by war. The deficit, due to the war, of 2,000,000 agricultural laborers is partially met by the boys graduated from the farm schools.

Subscriptions to the amount of $22,563.54 have been raised in Boston for the widow and family of Patrolman Andrew B. Cuneo, who was murdered while in the performance of his duty. The committee which has had charge of the fund has issued a notice that the subscription list is closed and expressing great appreciation at the generous response to the appeal made to the citizens of Boston.

Many associations and institutions benefit under the will of Increase E. Noyes of Cambridge filed at East Cambridge. No valuation of the estate is given. Home-made Remedy Stops Coughs Quickly

The best cough medicine you ever used. A family supply easily and quickly made. Saves about $2.

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough, is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is pure and good.

Pour 2½ ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply—but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membranes that line the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for healing the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Don't Squeeze Black-Heads—Dissolve Them

Squeezing and pinching out blackheads make the pores large and cause irritation—then, too, after they have become hard you cannot get all of them out. Blackheads are caused by accumulations of dust and dirt and secretions from the skin and there is only one safe and sure way and one that never fails to get rid of them—a simple way, too—that is to dissolve them. Just get from any drug store about two ounces of calonite powder—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet sponge—rub over the blackheads briskly for a few seconds—wash off and you'll be surprised to see that every blackhead has disappeared, and the skin will be left soft and the pores in their natural condition—anyone troubled with these unsightly blemishes should try this simple method.—[Advertisement.

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

By Olive Gray.

Up-to-Datest:

To keep your bonbons or your cigarettes—if you are that sort of person—in one of those delightful boxes of palmetto wood that are being shown, together with other interesting importations from France and Belgium and Italy, on the art floor of that great Seventh-street store of fine wares, domestic and foreign. With the gaily colored pictures of French children and scenes that decorate the tops of these fascinating containers, go friendly little mottos and greetings that it will refresh your schoolgirl or war-time French to translate.

A vivid and stunning chapeau savoring in outline, as well as color, of a cardinal's hat of the Middle Ages. It is of the new red, known as pillar box, and its broad brim is rolled in four sections, making points back and front and over either ear. The single ornament is a great rosette, on the left side, of jet nail heads, from which depends, through the slit brim, a long loop of matching jet beads.

The use of bright colors, rather than black or white, in children's clothes, this season. A smart frock for an 8-year-old girl shows a short, deeply scalloped skirt of dark blue cloth, attached to a long waist of flag-like red and white flannel, through which runs a fine line of navy. The waist is scalloped at its left-side closing to match the skirt finish and has the favorite bathing-suit sleeves. At the throat it fastens snugly in a collar of dark blue velvet.

A New Beautifier.

Like the making of books, of the manufacture of skin foods there is no end. We have muscle oils and tissue builders; cleansing cremes (spelling, I find, is indicative of aristocracy in the cream family) and massage creams; sunburn lotions and freckle removers; bleachers and smoothers; finishing creams and vanishing creams. Not to mention the old-fashioned home-made product of lanolin and benzoin with a drop of oil of rose added. The creams of commerce, turned out in enticing pink and white boxes, are products of as many formulas as there are recipes for home brew. And you are taking your popularity in your hand if, in an unguarded moment, your convictions drive you to mention the fact that your particular face cream is really the only sort to use. Other varieties may have one or another of the many virtues claimed for them—you have tried most of them, so you speak authoritatively—but the one you have settled upon and installed in the right-hand corner of your dressing-table drawer is the sole lineal descendant of the beauty lotion used by Ninon d'Enclos, rediscovered by Pompadour and passed on down to Recamier, etc.

All of which is in my mind as I write of my real joy when I discovered recently in the interesting niche in that oldest of reliable stores given over to delicious toiletries the creams and nail polishes and scalp nourishers put out by an Englishwoman, a notable specialist in the care of the skin and the hair. Behind this accomplished compounder of beauty specifics is a long line of clear-skinned English ancestresses who, in the cool, clean "still room" of an ancient farmhouse of the midshires, used the selfsame recipes of these pastes and lotions to preserve their lilies and roses of forehead and cheek and keep abundant their glossy locks. I once saw one of the women of the beauty apothecary's family and, inasmuch as she might have been her own grand-daughter, she was was the best possible advertisement for the tribal brand of creams.

The New Mantilla.

The girl who is sailing next week for a glorious month of swimming, and dining, and dancing, and being suitored in Honolulu was buying, when I came upon her the other morning, one of the new mantilla throws. These graceful, drapey things, as picturesque as they are practical, are the latest—but by indications not the last—symbol of Spain's conquest of the feminine world interpreted in terms of clothes. One wonders where it will halt—this vogue, amounting to an obsession, for making ourselves, from comb-crowned high coiffures to strapped dancing slippers, look as nearly like a Velasquez portrait as is possible.

The girl who is going to Honolulu showed, in selecting a crimson scarf with foot-long fringe, looking like a gorgeous Andalusian shawl that had been cut in half, that she had studied her type and knew this particular red of all reds was the one to best bring out her olive skin and thin, fine features and the dusky mass of her high-piled hair. The mantilla, already a thing of beauty, will prove a joy forever as an evening wrap to fling around the sort of filmy frock she will wear in a Honolulu ballroom when she steps out, between dances, on the moonlit lanai. Observe, I say "between dances." One doesn't, even for the sake of the magical, magnolia-scented Hawaiian night—not to mention potential attractions of a masculine sort—sit out dances in Honolulu. The music of the native orchestra takes care of that.

Going back to the Spanish mantillas. Some of the loveliest are made of heavy Nagasaki crepe, lined in chiffon or crepe de chine. The long silk fringe is an indispensable part, of course, as it is the chief beauty of each and every one. They are worn a la Carmen, with an end thrown over the left shoulder.

Some Attractive Clothes.

The Spanish mantilla of crimson crepe is not the only arrow in the quiver with which the girl who is going to Honolulu is arming herself for conquest, in the languorously beautiful islands of the South Pacific. She plans to embark in a topcoat of loose-all-enveloping lines, made of tan worumbo, collared and cuffed in beaver. With this goes a smart little turban of the same shade in duvetyn, with a dab of beaver to ally it to the coat, tan sport shoes and heavy ribbed, two-toned, wool hose. After the second day of dropping toward the Equator, when chill fogs have vanished, she will shed the sheathing in which she walked up the gangway and appear in a cheerful outfit of scarlet over-blouse, worn with a plaited skirt of midnight blue cloth, which flares to show fine lines of scarlet, white and bottle green between the plaits. There is an accompanying hat to this sports costume—a jaunty thing, saucer-shaped, in darkest blue, touched with scarlet. It goes without saying that a scarf carrying on the red and blue alliance is counted in, with this.

An afternoon frock for wear on cool days—if there are any such in Hawaii—made the dark-haired, olive-tinted girl into a Russian beauty. The gown was striking in the originality with which it combined a waist of sand crepe, cut along the prevalent moyenage lines, with a straight skirt of black velvet. There were long sleeves of the angel variety, of gold lace, forming an effect almost cape-like and there was, of course, an elaborate girdle of metal, worn over the hips. The skirt hem was uneven and curved at the back, into a tiny train. It was a wonderful gown.

Vogue Volunteers That:

Circles of colored silk are appliqued on a blouse of black crepe de chine.

White crepe marocain dominates among the white materials now worn so much.

A hat for restaurant wear is of silver cloth studded elaborately with tiny shells.

The popular grays shade from pearl and taupe to deep iron and mouse tones.

A black serge dress had a puritan collar and cuffs of brown suede with perforated designs.

A cascade of little tassels falls down the front of a smart coat frock and decorates the sleeves.

Three-quarter length white box coats of wool are trimmed with dark-brown fur or black velvet.

A dress of black picotine has flaring cuffs faced with flame color duvetyn, and a collar of the duvetyn.

A close-fitting hat of gray duvetyn is trimmed with oriental embroidery and squares of sea-foam blue celluloid.

A drooping hat of black velvet is faced with flesh-colored crepe de chine and trimmed with calla lilies and white angora wool.

A lingerie set including night-dress, shirt and bloomers is of white crepe de chine, trimmed with garnet satin ribbon and zigzag stiching.

How Could He Help Believing.

"Do you believe in dreams?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Aren't you even the least bit skeptical?"

"Skeptical? How can I be? Night before last my wife dreamed of a new bracelet—and today I got the bill for it."—[Der Brummer.

The fur is so fine, lustrous and durable that a good skin has always commanded from £100 to £200. Last year the pelts were not of first grade; several were taken from the bodies of dead otter found on the seashore, but the average price at London was about £400 a pelt.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS,
WARTS AND MOLES.

Pulling a few stiff hairs from the face may start a serious growth. Let me demonstrate free of charge how tweezing, cutting, using wax depilatories and the so-called hair removers promote growth of hair on the face. My electric machine is the only known method of killing superfluous hair, fuzz, warts and moles without destroying the surrounding tissue. This machine destroys 300 hairs an hour. I have had 24 years' experience and devote all my time to the work. A binding guarantee that any hairs or moles I treat will never return. Many L. A. satisfied customers will testify to my skill as an expert. Work done at your home by appointment.

MRS. F. A. SCOTT,
Suite 407 Bumiller Bldg.
430 S. Broadway.

FACE PEEL—

ALSO HAND PEEL.

A home treatment that removes fine lines, tan, sallow or discolored and mottled skin without inconvenience in a few days. Our preparations contain no mercury or other injurious substances and can be safely used by any one. Complete outfits, $3 each. If your skin does not suit you, let us help and advise you.

MME. COMAN STANLEY,

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR, MOLES, WARTS painlessly, permanently removed by electricity; leaving no scars. Satisfactory work guaranteed. Eyebrows arched. Depilatories and other so-called hair removing methods are useless and temporary. The only permanent relief is electrolysis, for the electric current kills the roots of the hair. My latest multiple-needle machines removes 300 hairs an hour. All work receives my personal attention. Special rate mornings, $1 an hour per needle. MRS. BARTON, Electrolysis expert. 526 Black Bldg., Fourth and Hill. Tel. 13213.

Store and Office.

WANTED—A REAL MAN.

I want a general office man, one familiar with the real estate and insurance business preferred. Some typewriting, small amount of book-keeping, renting, listing and the usual routine office duties.

Want a willing worker, one who is not above keeping a small office, with only few salesmen, in good trim. Night-lifers, male flirts and dope fiends barred; also impertinence and egotism.

Must write a good, plain hand and have average intelligence, allied to honesty, reliability, loyalty and above all else, CHARACTER.

Don't want a sport nor a mollycoddle, nor yet a wife's doormat, but just a real man—one who cusses occasionally where necessary, smokes if he wants to and drinks a little if he likes it.

Don't want a grouch nor a mutt, but do want an agreeable, congenial and honorable gentleman, of good habits—married or single.

I know I am asking a great deal, but the reward will be commensurate, in good time, if you can fill the requirements.

If you don't measure up to them, please don't waste my time, nor your own. I am tired of "try-outs" and want to get just the right man—one who will stay with me for the remainder of my business life and whom I can trust implicitly. Responsible and old established concern. Attractive office and location; pleasant environment. Salary $125 first month's trial, $150 following and as much more later as your abilities, industry and initiative will warrant. You can earn it for me if you're the right man for the position. In your own handwriting and in confidence address XX, box 414, TIMES BRANCH.

LONDON DEATH RATE LOWERED.

British Metropolis Now the Healthiest in World.

Eighty Years is Average Span of Life in City.

Babe Production Sets New High Record for England.

BY EVAN GRIFFITHS.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Oct. 22.—There is no Volstead Act in London, which, perhaps, is just as well, for, it appears, according to official reports, about the only way that one can die here is to drink one's self to death.

Other methods do not seem to be effective.

It this year breaks whole world's record for salubriousness in great cities.

London, good old London, can lay claim, at last, to being the world's healthiest city.

While American statisticians are expending energy upon producing proof that New York City is the largest on the surface of the earth, and pride themselves, apparently, on their flat statements that the arrangements of their citizens in layers, distributed in high apartment-houses and tenements, gives them the greatest population in the world to the square mile, or acre or square inch, or whatnot, London gaily cries:

"Well, what care we? We cannot die!"

LOWEST DEATH RATE.

Dr. W. H. Hamer, medical health officer of the London City Council, announces that the death rate here has fallen to 12.6 for every thousand Londoners. And announcing this he adds with pride the pleasant truth that this is quite the lowest death rate London or any other really great city ever knew.

It gives London an immense lead over New York City, and, we understand on this side, New York in turn has a great lead over Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Boston. In the meantime, on this side, we know that Paris and Berlin, the only normal cities of the metropolitan class now left in Europe cannot compare in salubriety with John Bull's own Lunnon town.

Against London's 12.6 New York shows 16.71 deaths annually per thousand people, while the London figures give the death rates of Pittsburg, Philadelphia and New Orleans as more than double that of London.

One London newspaper says: "Perhaps in time death of any kind will be unnatural to London. If it were not for strikes, Lloyd George, the new women's fashions, the Irish question and American motion-picture films we well might hope so."

In his learned report Dr. Hamer says that if this health rate can be maintained it will increase the average span of life of those who reach majority in London to almost exactly 80 years. This is an amazing statement, but Dr. Hamer must be taken seriously.

Dr. Hamer claims that infant mortality in London now has fallen to just 76 per thousand, which he says, with lovely satisfaction, seems to him to compare favorably with the 85 per thousand of New York.

Not only is old London, with its fogs and smoke and music halls and supper clubs and Parliament, healthier than any American city indicated on official returns, but it is healthier than any other town in the United Kingdom and far healthier than the British rural districts.

London has made a brand-new record in baby production, too. The birth rate has increased to 26.4, a gain of 45 per cent in a very few years.

AGAIN LEADS NEW YORK.

And here again New York lags woefully behind. Its birth rate, according to the figures which the London experts point to with a certain scorn, amounts to only 23.51 per thousand. Thus while London saves 4.11 mature lives more out of each thousand every year than New York does, it adds to its population in each corresponding period almost two more infants than New York produces to each thousand of inhabitants.

Turning from percentages to actual figures we are told that during this summer's unprecedentedly hot weather the deaths in London actually numbered 20,000 fewer than during the preceding quarter.

It almost seems as if old nature were trying to make up for the pitiless slaughter which war thrust on London, for the proportion of boys born among these very numerous births was greater than is usual by a comfortable margin. Surplus women in the coming generation may not be so great a problem as the sociologists have been fearing. In the summer quarter of the present year 8000 more boys than girls were born in London out of a total of children born, both sexes, of 225,336.

So there you are—deaths down, births up and boys especially coming very strong! Who says old England is falling into the sere and yellow? She is becoming vigorous and gay.

THROUGH HELL GATE ON THE COLUMBIA.

A trip through Hell Gate on the Columbia River in search of material for his camera is graphically and entertainingly told by Lewis R. Freeman, in the October Sunset. Mr. Freeman says, in part:

"Although Hell Gate is a long way from being the worst rapid on the Columbia, it comes pretty near to qualifying as the worst looking rapid. A long black reef, jutting out from the left bank, chokes the Columbia into a narrow channel and forces it over against the rocky wall on the right. The river shoots between these structures with great velocity, only to split itself in two against a big rock island 100 yards farther down. The more direct channel is to the right, but it is too narrow to be of use. The main river, writhing like a wounded snake after being bounced off the sheer wall of the island, zigzags on through the black basaltic barrier in a course shaped a good deal like an elongated letter "Z." Hell Gate is a rapid shaped like a flash of lightning, and with just as much kick in it.

"My spine was a bar of red hot iron rasping up and down along the exposed ends of all its connecting nerves, when a throaty "Aw right!" from Ike signalled that the worst was past. Hanging over the end of the trailing sweep-handle, I saw that the raft had swung into a big eddy at the foot of the island, and that the launch, with its engine still spraying scattered pops, was trying to help the back-current carry her into the right bank."

LENIN ADMITS SOVIET DEFEAT.

Bolshevik Leader Reports Changes in Policy.

Communists Adopt Economic Plans of Czars.

Desperate Position Caused Move, He Declares.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

RIGA, Oct. 22.—After a long rest in the country, Premier Lenin of soviet Russia has returned with an admission of Communists' defeat, according to an account of a speech he made before the congress of political workers in Moscow, given out by the Rosta Agency, official Bolshevik news disseminator.

"Our new economic policy in substance follows from the fact that we have suffered a strong defeat and have begun to carry out a stragetic retreat," he declared. "Before we are defeated finally let us step back and reform anew, but on a stronger basis.

ADMITS CHANGES.

"Everybody sees what a sharp turn the soviet powers and the Communist party have taken by adopting a new economic policy which, in substance, contains more of the old regime than of our previous policy. The attitude of the soviets toward economic questions during the first half of 1918 was extraordinarily cautious. Then the necessity of considering the peasants was always pointed out and the role of state capitalism in Socialistic construction was considered.

"The civil war and the desperate position in which the republic found itself compelled us to change directly to Communistic production and distribution. However, a not very lengthy experience convinced us that without having gone through a period of Socialistic adjustment and investigation it was not possible to reach even the lowest steps of Communism.

DEFEAT EXPERIENCED.

"There can be no doubt that on the economic front, in the attempt to come over to Communism toward the spring of 1921, we suffered a defeat more serious than any we had experienced. This showed our economic policies failed to have their feet on the ground and did not create that raising of productive powers recognized in the party program as fundamental and urgent.

"Requisitions in villages and a direct Communistic approach to construction problems in the city retarded the elevation of our productive powers and were the cause of a deep economic and political crisis. We recognized defeat and retreated, and the retreat is continuing in many places at present, amid unnecessary disorders."

COPPER COINS ARE SCARCE IN SYDNEY.

TREASURY OFFICERS BAFFLED BY SHORTAGE—CAN'T FIND LEAK IN MONEY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SYDNEY (N. S. W.) Sept. 26.—Australia now is in the midst of one of its periodical mysterious shortages of copper coins, which have baffled treasury officials.

Children's banks were held responsible at first for the shortage and an appeal from the Treasury resulted in the exchange of many coppers for silver money. Despite this and the assistance of certain clumsy counterfeiters, copper coins are exceedingly scarce. In some quarters the approach of Christmas was blamed as, during the annual busy shopping period large retail houses have heavy demands for change, and it was thought that some of the corporations had accumulated a surplus of coppers against these demands.

"We are coining 800 pounds worth of pennies and about 300 pounds worth of half-pennies every week," J. R. Collins, Secretary of the Treasury, said. "We are at a loss to explain how there can be a shortage. The Treasury never withdraws coppers from circulation so that our output is additional to those already in use."

POSTMASTERS NAMED FOR ARIZONA PLACES.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

BISBEE (Ariz.) Oct. 22.—Charles W. Hicks, appointed postmaster of Bisbee, has been acting in that capacity since last April, when L. R. Bailey was removed for a shortage that later sent him to the penitentiary. Bailey, an old-time railroad man, has been a local resident for twenty years, has been County Treasurer and was a member of the City Council until he resigned to conduct the post-office.

At Nogales appointment as postmaster has come to Capt. Charles L. Beatty, a border resident long in government service. He succeeds Editor Emory L. Miller of the Border Vidette, who has been acting postmaster for several months.

Michael O'Connor, for twenty years a resident of Gleeson, has been appointed acting postmaster at that point, succeeding Mrs. M. J. Sullivan, resigned.

PYX CHAPEL WELL GUARDED.

The most jealously guarded apartment in England is that known as the chapel of the Pyx. The vault is only accessible through double doors opened by no fewer than six keys and permission to enter requires the signature of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the financial secretary of the Treasury, and the Controller of the Exchequer. Once the treasury of the kings of England, this immensely strong underground chamber was used until the year 1904 for the safe-keeping of the gold and silver standards used every five years by the mint authorities. Toward the close of that year, however, these standards were transferred, together with other valuables, to the royal mint on Tower Hill, and the vault now holds little or nothing to tempt an enterprising burglar. — [Indianapolis News.

KNOX AND TAFT BOTH "GAMBLE."

Late Senator Won Bet From President on Game.

Chief Executive Backs Cubs Against Pirates.

Three Big, Black Stogies Then Change Hands.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PITTSBURG, Oct. 22.—Apropos of the recent death of United States Senator Philander C. Knox, every one has heard stories of he being a sphinx, the inscrutable, the conservative. But Senator Knox, the boisterous, and worse, the gambler! Surprising, impossible! Shakespeare said, "The evil that men do lives after them." Leave it to Tom F. McQuaide, Pittsburg's grand old detective, former superintendent of police and rejuvenator of police systems throughout the country, and he'll tell you about a mysterious affair that took place at Exposition Park between Senator Knox and President William H. Taft, now Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

The date of the Senator's infraction, as well as that of the chief magistrate, was May 29, 1909, when the Senator accompanied the President on a tour throughout the city. It so happened that the Chicago Cubs of the National League, owned by Charlie Taft, the President's brother, were playing with the Pittsburg Pirates at the old Exposition Park, just a month before they were out to the new grounds at Forbes Field. At that time Tom McQuaide was Chief of Police, and here's what he said:

GUARDED PRESIDENT.

"Twelve of my bravest and biggest men, under my personal supervision, were the President's bodyguard. We escorted the Presidential party to old Exposition Park that day, and in the party was President Hadley of Yale University, who had been telling President Taft how bad his brother's team looked. The Chief Executive pooh-poohed the idea of the Cubs being second-raters to the Pirates, and expressed his contempt of Barney Dreyfuss's pets. Up to this time Senator Knox had taken only a passing interest in the national game, but the remark of the President aroused his sense of pride in Pittsburg, and suddenly woke and became very anxious over Hans Wagner, Tommy Leach, George Gibson and Fred Clarke.

"I was about twenty feet from the President's box, and distinctly heard the argument grow warmer and warmer between Knox and Taft, until suddenly Mr. Knox shouted excitedly to the President 'I'll bet you—' and his voice trailed away to nothing, as though he realized that he presented no appearance in keeping with his position.

CROWD OVERHEARD.

"But those near the box heard the first three words, and a ripple rushed over the fans as they heard the Presidential party was not averse to betting. The good-natured raillery continued until the last half of the ninth inning. The score, as I remember it, was 3 to 2 in favor of Chicago, and things looked bad for the Senator's wager. The first two Buccaneers got on and Hans Wagner came to bat. The pitcher tried in every way to fool the great Dutchman but without avail, and the ball was poled out to center field for three bases, sending two runners over and winning the game 4 to 3. Senator Knox and Mr. Hadley then began clamping their hands on the President's back in great glee, just like they would with any other fan, but Mr. Taft laughed it off.

"They filed out of the gate, and President Taft got separated from the party, in a manner that no one knew. I detailed all my men to search for him. They had no sooner left when the President ambled back, rocking with laughter, and handed Senator Knox three black Pennsylvania stogies. The wager was paid, and the Senator took on a new role—gambler."

DOG PLEADS OWN CASE OVER PHONE.

JUDGE LISTENS TO WAILING AND DECIDES CANINE MAY GO HOME.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

KANSAS CITY (Kan.) Oct. 22.—Teddy, a young Collie dog, makes his own plea to Police Judge West, Kansas City, Kan., over the telephone, and is granted a parole. The system in Kansas City, Kan., where dogs are charged with misbehavior is to sentence them to confinement at the Wyandotte county Humane Society Animal Refuge for from one to three weeks. Teddy was sent up for two weeks, but having never been away from home and friends before, he spent both days and nights in dismal wailing. The matron, Mrs. Whitford, brought him into her own rooms and did everything to comfort him, but the wailing continued.

Finally she decided to call up Judge West and ask him if some arrangement could not be made for Teddy's parole. While she was talking Teddy rushed to her side and quite silenced her voice with his own. Judge West asked if that was Teddy speaking now, and Mrs. Whitford assured him that it was. Judge West, having heard the arguments, rendered a decision that Teddy might go home and remain there during good behavior.

FOURTH DIVISION RECORDS INTACT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CAMP LEWIS (Wash.) Oct. 22.—Records of the Fourth Division of the United States Army, which fought in several major engagements on the western front, are to be preserved, although the division recently ceased to exist as an active combat unit.

Shortly before the division went out of existence it was transferred to Camp Lewis and later was consolidated with the Third Division. The Fourth Division was formed at Camp Greene, N. C., and went overseas early in 1918. In June, 1918, it moved into the Aisne-Marne offensive, and later some of its units were in the Vesle and Toulon sectors and the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensive. If the division is ever revived its records, standards and legends will be available for use.

BRITISH MAKE EXPLORER HERO

Sir Ernest Shackleton Given Tributes of Country.

Begins Voyage to South Polar Regions in "Quest."

Expedition to Plumb Deepest Places in Ocean.

BY GEORGE MILLER.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Oct. 22.—Nothing more extraordinary than the tribute given to Sir Ernest Shackleton at the time of his departure in his little ship, the Quest, for the South Polar regions, ever has been known in England. And the interest maintains. Ten days have passed, but the voyage of the Quest is still a general topic of conversation.

For some curious reason Shackleton, who is primarily a scientific man, now is a public hero, although there is but little thought that he is entering into serious perils on the long voyage which he has planned.

The most interesting detail of the work which he will do, in the eyes of many scientists, involves a series of deep-sea soundings in far seas to date uncharted.

Ocean sounding has not been developed to its ultimate or even near to it. The ocean's deepest region is unknown, for no instrument exists which can penetrate beyond a little more than five miles distance straight down into the water.

WATER TOO SOLID.

Why? Because the water at a greater depth is far too solid to be penetrated by any weight of metal. It is made too solid by compression due to the bearing down of the vast weight above of its own volume. The pressure of the water becomes great enough to overcome the specific gravity of any sinking object. It is even generally believed by scientists that ships which meet with a disastrous fate over deep spots may sink, but never possibly can reach the bottom, because the water, in the greater depths, is of a specific gravity far greater than their own—even though they be of steel. One theorist declares that a solid block of steel would fail to sink, but would hang in suspension at some undetermined depth if thrown into the water over a depth of twenty miles.

PLUMB FIVE MILES.

The greatest depth which up to the present time ever has been actually plumbed is just a little under the traditional five miles. Theorists maintain, however, that in certain sections the Atlantic Ocean has a depth of four times that. It is further stated that in a depth of twenty miles, water through compression would reach a density which would make its hardness quite sufficient to resist the penetration of a cannon ball of solid steel fired into it or at it by the greatest charge of high explosive ever known. Not much chance of sounding such depths with any instrument at present known!

Some of the most wonderful instruments ever used in this branch of oceanography are now on board the Quest bound south with Shackleton. Among these are hard steel weights of seventy pounds, carrying at their bottom suction cups and to be sent down at the end of fine piano wire. The cups close automatically when they touch the bottom, and thus, in them, are brought to the surface specimens from the ocean's floor.

AUTOMATIC RECORDS.

The weights are also provided with a dial on which the depth they reach is automatically recorded. This obviates the possibility of errors which would be likely if the depth was judged by the outlet of wire. Swift-flowing currents or several other influences might make such estimates entirely inaccurate, for wire at the surface apparently sinking straight, might actually be greatly curved at some depth which it reached.

It is believed that the Shackleton expedition will break all world's records in deep-sea soundings.

WOMEN BLAMED FOR GAIN IN DIVORCES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 22.—Women becoming economically independent is attributed as the cause of the increase in divorces by court officials here.

Divorces granted in St. Louis this year have exceeded greatly those of other years, it was said. Nearly 700 divorce cases were assigned to the Court of Domestic Relations at one of its terms. There were only 2543 divorces granted in the entire State of Missouri in 1896, and 5791 in 1916, according to records.

AMERICAN PHILATELISTS

[A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, Oct. 3.—Several American stamp collectors have been in London lately eagerly trying to secure the pick of English collections of United States stamps. One reason for the present boom in American stamps, a well-known London stamp dealer explains, is the fact that the older issues are remarkably well engraved.

"Americans," this dealer continued, "are particularly keen on issues depicting scenes in their national history.

"The 24-cent issue of 1869 shows a picture of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. It is so excellent a specimen of the engraver's art that its present quotation is £4, unused, and £2 used.

LAGUNA SHORT OF COTTO

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

TORREON (Mex.) Oct. 20.—With a total cotton production of only about 60,000 bales in the famous Laguna district around Torreon, which is the principal cotton growing region in Mexico, this country is said to be facing a big shortage of the staple this season.

The small production is due to several causes, the chief of which was the drouth that prevailed earlier in the season. There also was a big reduction of acreage as compared with previous years. The pink boll worm and boll weevil did little damage.

It is expected that the cotton mills in different parts of Mexico

REPLACING TEXAS STRIKERS.

Business of Road Where First Men Walk Out Will Go Along as Usual, is Promise of Its Officials.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN ANTONIO (Tex.) Oct. 22.—Approximately 600 members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen on the International and Great Northern Railroad of Texas, who struck at noon today, are being replaced by experienced men, Supt. J. R. Jones announced tonight.

J. M. Landis, chief clerk to the superintendent, said the road is able to get all the experienced men it wants, and it was announced advertisements had been ordered inserted in Sunday newspapers, calling for switchmen and brakemen.

TRAIN CARRIES GUARDS.

At 7 o'clock tonight passenger train No. 7 left the terminal carrying two armed guards. The train was in charge of Conductor E. M. Lewis, but had no brakeman. It had been announced earlier that porters would do the brakemen's work on all trains.

The strike of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen started at noon and the sixteen switchmen and yardmen then on duty left the yards. In all there are about sixty-eight switchmen and yardmen employed here and about 147 brakemen.

R. D. Frame, general chairman of the I. & G. N. trainmen, said the strike would be 100 per cent by tomorrow, when the last brakemen starting on a run before the strike went into effect will have reached a terminal.

Guards carrying shotguns were stationed about the depot and about the yards today. Everything was quiet and orderly.

OFFICIALS IN YARDS.

Supt. Jones at noon assisted in making up a train and doing switching. The yardmaster and trainmaster did likewise.

Division officials declined to state what per cent of a full force was on duty and what per cent of service could be given. It was estimated there are 1000 armed guards on the line.

In spite of press dispatches from some points that freight schedules were being canceled for the present and only passenger trains would be moved, officials said no trains had been or would be canceled.

HERE'S NEW WAY TO BE BARTENDER

Raid on Cafe Reveals Hole in Wall High Above Floor Containing Liquid.

The modern bartender (oh, yes they still have them) in lieu of white apron, shining copper containers, automatic bottle washer, billy, cork screw, beer-bottle opener, mirror background and mahogany foreground, occupies a post something like this:

He lies or squats in a hole in the wall, twenty feet from the floor, with pillows for his head, blankets to ease his bones and fiction magazines to read anon. About him are gallon bottles and many flasks of a size to fit snugly in hip pockets. On pegs within reach (for he can reach everywhere in his little place) are strings with loops tied in them. At a signal, this modern bartender fixes a string about the neck of a flask and lowers it over the edge of his niche. It touches bottom in a palm, the string is untied and hauled up.

In such a cosy, comfy little nook sits the post-prohibition bartender, like a saint in a niche, or at least as secure.

Such is the astounding testimony of four hardheaded policemen, Sergt. Behrendt and Patrolmen Massey, Phillips and Koch, who last night raided the Red Lantern Coffee House, 118 South Spring street. Attracted by a strong aroma of Kentucky mountain Java, they smelled of cups and saucers and, following their noses, got a ladder and found the habitat of the now-a-day knight of the bottle.

But the knight had flown, unless he had descended on a ladder. However, the eight arms of the law present managed to detain L. P. Weber, who said he was the proprietor and a man who said he was Philip Lipshutz. The latter, the police say, became alarmed probably fearing that the place was being held up. But as he started to run Policeman Huff, who is a heavy-middleweight, fell on him. Mr. Lipshutz carried a parcel, which fell to the floor, deluging him and the policeman with something that smelled midway between bay rum and furniture varnish.

Mr. Weber denied emphatically, several times, that he had been aware of the aerial retreat, where the police found ten gallons of the evil smelling liquid. Mr. Weber said it must have been there before he rented the place.

FIRE UNDER CONTROL.

Blaze Threatening Resort Now Beyond Danger Point.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 22.—The Montecito forest fire, after climbing high up on the mountains overlooking the city, has been brought definitely under control. One hundred men were employed and succeeded in surrounding it this afternoon. Montecito has been in no danger since fog came in yesterday morning. The only loss except to the watershed was the destruction of the Hot Springs Club, owned by millionaire residents in Montecito and which was totally destroyed with a loss of probably $50,000. It will be rebuilt immediately.

In the northern part of the county the Cuyama fire on the Caliente Ranch is still burning and is believed to be serious. Reports received from other sections of the forest indicate that the two days' fog was general and that fire danger at least for the present is over.

POST-MARKET CLIMAX.

Steel Rail Prices Lowered; Freight Rates Reduced; News Arrives After the Close.

BY ALEXANDER DANA NOYES.
Financial Editor New York "Times."
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—The two important occurrences of the day were not generally known until today's financial markets had closed. It had been expected that some further downward revision of railway rates for western farm products would be made; indeed, the rates have already been slightly lowered. But the Interstate Commerce Commission's order of today, for a reduction estimated in the dispatches at 16 per cent, brings the rate on western railways to barely one-half of the basis authorized in the July, 1920, award.

It was probably in contemplation of a reduction in rates on steel products that the United States Steel Corporation this afternoon announced that its price for its rails would be reduced from $47 per ton to $40. This concession brings the price to the lowest figure since the autumn of 1917, just before the $55 price was fixed by the War Industries Board. The new price is still, however, more than 40 per cent above the prewar price of $28, which prevailed unchanged from the spring of 1901 up to the spring of 1918.

Taken together, the Washington announcement and the Pittsburg announcement pointed rather clearly to something like a general readjustment which will cover railway rates and railway materials, but it is not apparent what part, if any, is to be played by railway wages.

The most that can be said at the moment is that events thus far appear to have been pursuing the course prescribed by the logic of the general situation. Today's incidents largely obscured the question of the railway brotherhoods and their threatened strike. As to the outcome of that matter, however, it must be said that the financial community made up its mind a few days ago and has not changed it.

Some railway shares were lower on the stock exchange today, but most of them were little changed and all were inactive. The bulk of the day's business was in a few industrial stocks; some of which marked, by their further advance, the exemplary punishment of certain "bear traders" who broke the price early in the week on invented "rumors." The day's foreign exchange market hardly moved.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Stock trading today was active but professional, involving much short coverings. Rails were not perceptibly influenced by further efforts of the administration to avert a strike, that phase evidently being neutralized by the cut in western freight rates.

Steels also moved uncertainly, the cut in rails by the United States Steel Corporation being accepted as another indication of the keen competition prevailing in that industry, coupled with the relatively high cost of production.

Oils and equipments guided the general list to higher levels, Mexican Petroleum, Houston, Haskell and Barker, Pullman and Harvester making extreme gains of 2 to 5 points. In the case of Mexican Petroleum, however, a sharp reversal occurred before the close, some other advances also undergoing sharp impairment. Sales 400,000 shares.

Dealings in bonds were light at narrow price changes, a majority of the Liberty issues easing. Speculative rails also shaded with transportation shares and foreign issues were featureless. Total sales, par value, aggregated $6,150,000.

Noteworthy items in the clearing-house statement included a decrease of $73,000,000 in actual loans and discounts, contraction of $31,800,00 in reserves of members in the Federal Reserve Bank and a decrease of about $41,600,000 in cash holdings, causing a deficit in excess of $2,525,000.

Weekly surveys of general business conditions were highly encouraging, western advices, for example, reporting wholesale distribution in merchandising lines as far in excess of the corresponding period of last year.

GEN. JACQUES, WORLD WAR HERO, ARRIVES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BRITISH RADIO GIRDLES GLOBE.

Powerful System Planned to Link Empire's Parts.

Wireless to Handle Millions of Words Cheaply.

First Station Completed With 4000-Mile Radius.

BY GEORGE MILLER.
[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Oct. 22.—England is to rival, and even to outstrip, the great wireless development planned by France. In this way the two leading European nations will provide communications of the latest order, cheap and fully efficient, for themselves as governments and for their business men, and other citizens in all parts of the world, no matter how widely separated, which will give them great advantages over those of the United States, both in cheapness and facility of operation.

The British scheme is described under the general name of Empire Wireless. It is not a dream, but a fact, in part, accomplished and being pushed with all speed toward complete realization.

The Leafield, Oxfordshire, station has been opened.

This single station, high-powered and complete, has a 2000-mile range, which would enable it to relay messages from stations on each side of it to a total distance of 4000 miles, or almost one-sixth of the circumference of the earth.

OPEN GREATEST STATION.

August 19, on the occasion of the station's christening, the Postmaster-General, Mr. Kellaway, freely predicted that within a short time he would be able to communicate through it and its relays with British postoffice officials in the most remote parts of the empire.

The station has a plant providing heavy voltage, which will leave it a fine surplus when working with the next station in the great British chain, which now is being constructed at Abu Zabal, near Cairo, in Egypt.

This later will line up with others in Mesopotamia, India, Singapore, Hongkong, Africa, and finally, through the others, with Australia. The new installations will be capable of use for either telegraphy or telephony.

SYSTEM'S ADVANTAGES.

Perhaps the greatest of all advantages seen for the new system of communication will be the cheapness of news transmission. Daily and Sunday journals in London will receive full reports of events and frank discussions of political trends in the far distant British dominions daily and at at a cost which will make it possible to handle them in full without bankruptcy for publishers.

An Australian journalist who now is in London said to me with something like a grin of triumph on his fact, this afternoon, that when the chain gets into full operation it will be cheaper to send messages from London to Melbourne for publication that it now is or will be (if old methods are relied upon in the United States) to send dispatches from New York to the Buffalo Express.

Messages sent from London to Capetown, he went on, eventually will cost less per word than messages now do when sent to his home paper by the New York correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

LOW CHARGES PLANNED.

Later, it is believed, even these charges will be much reduced.

All this has been definitely planned by the great group of experts who have had the empire wireless chain in charge.

The Leafield station was designed entirely by the experts of the Postoffice Department, without the slightest aid from anyone outside the government service.

In the first message which was sent from the great aerials the Postmaster-General expressed the hope that the great enterprise might render to the empire such a service as has been indicated and there is not the slightest doubt that his hope will be fully realized.

On the occasion of the station's first half-hour of operation it communicated clearly and without the slightest slip with Paris, Christiania, Posen, Prague, Denmark, Buda-Pest, Rome and Berlin, the messages being sent and answered in the order named.

TRADE REVIEW.

Dun's review of the Chicago trade says:

"Coal is about the only commodity that has shown a noteworthy increase in distribution this week. Retail sales of merchandise are in fair volume, but beyond a nearly normal movement of seasonable apparel there is little of encouragemnet to report. Wholesale business presents a brighter outlook. Orders are about 75 per cent ahead of the corresponding time last year in numbers and 25 to 35 per cent in volume. The manner in which merchants are buying seems to reflect greater confidence. Manufacturing activity is not increasing. Merchants are in the city markets in larger numbers and the reports they give of conditions in the interior are cheerful. Collections show improvement."

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the wholesale dry-goods trade, say:

"Current wholesale distribution of dry goods exceeded last week and ran far ahead of corresponding period of last year. Business booked by our road salesmen has gained steadily since October 1, and is now several times as large as for the same week of 1920. The number of customers in market and the number of mail orders received show a similar increase. Collections remain at approximately the same level as last week. Merchants are buying in satisfactory volume for spring as well as for immediate delivery and it may be expected that wholesale distribution will run steadily ahead of last year."

The John V. Farwell Company's weekly review of trade says:

"Wholesale dry-goods business continues to improve. Our record of road orders for the week shows a gain of about 250 per cent in number and about 100 per cent in volume compared with the corresponding week last year. In analyzing these figures, however, in their relation to general business conditions it should be remembered that in October last year prices suddenly broke causing an unsettled condition among retailers. There is a good demand at present from the South for dry goods. Buyers have been in the market for large numbers. Collections are improving."

GOVERNORS GETTING READY.

Executives of Different States Inform "Times" of Plans to Keep Freight Moving Over Country.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

Inquiry by The Times as to measures being taken or contemplated by the governors of States to cope with the threatened railway strike brought the following replies:

KANSAS.

TOPEKA (Kan.) Oct. 22.—The Industrial Court Act of Kansas prohibits any men engaged in transportation from conspiring to deprive the public of its essential utility. It prohibits the railroad managers from closing down their transportation lines or from entering into any conspiracy to deprive the public of this utility. It prohibits the employees from entering into a conspiracy to deprive the public of transportation. The Kansas law provides that all controversies between the railroads and their employees relating to wages or working conditions shall be adjudicated in the court of industrial relations. In the meantime the lines shall continue to function.

This law will be enforced in Kansas, just as it was during the outlaw switchmen's strike, when the few who violated it were arrested and prosecuted for the violation. The executive office is now receiving and listing the names of volunteers who are capable of working in railroad industries. The law gives the State the power to take over the railroads and to operate them in behalf of the public. In case of the failure of the railroads to operate their lines, the State will take over those which are necessary to the public welfare. It is possible that the strike will not be made applicable to Kansas.—[Henry J. Allen, Governor of Kansas.

COLORADO.

DENVER, Oct. 22.—The State police are ready to suppress violence if it is threatened as a result of the strike. The State can meet the emergency without great suffering. I have no suggestions to offer to avert the strike.—[Gov. Oliver H. Shoup.

WYOMING.

CHEYENNE (Wyo.) Oct. 22.—I am hopeful that the railroad strike will not materialize and that the negotiations that are being carried on will result in a satisfactory understanding. It is my opinion that the present trouble is largely due to the fact that there are too many government agencies regulating railroads, particularly in that one agency which determines rates while another fixes wages and this arrangement. I do not think, will ever prove satisfactory. To your inquiry as to what official measures will be taken in this State, I am not prepared to say as that will depend upon developments.—Gov. R. D. Carey.

ARIZONA.

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Oct. 22.—I have great faith in President Harding. His courage and common sense will prevail and the strike will not come to pass. Congress should enact an antistrike law at once and forever rid the nation of the present threat.—Gov. Thomas Campbell.

LOUISIANA.

BATON ROUGE (La.) Oct. 22.—Louisiana has thus far taken no official measures to meet the possible strike situation. I have firm faith in the ability of the Federal government to avert this threatened disaster.

It would be a confession of weakness to admit the greatest of civilized nations lacks the power to prevent a crisis which threatens the general peace and prosperity when there is ample warning of the tie-up and its character and causes are definitely known. The American people may be engulfed by unexpected visitations, but their national government has resources which, courageously and promptly applied, can prevent any disaster which moves toward us deliberately and with ample notice.—Gov. John M. Parker.

OKLAHOMA.

OKLAHOMA CITY (Okla.) Oct. 22.—As Governor of the State I am bound to take notice of the suffering and loss that a nation-wide strike would entail. The companies and employees must understand that they comprise but a small percentage of the population of America and that the railways belong primarily to all the people and are permitted to operate for the benefit that may arise and accrue to all the people. The interests of all the people are superior and paramount to the interests of any class or faction. It is my duty to all the people to keep the railroads in operation in this State regardless of the strike. Volunteers will be found to operate freight trains, at least, and the State will be justified in taking possession of these properties and operating them in the interests of all the people should occasion demand. To that end I have called upon all citizens of Oblahoma to use their best efforts in assisting the State in every way possible to handle the emergency.—Gov. J. B. A. Robertson.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CONCORD (N. H.) Oct. 2.—In my judgment the fullest possible preparation to meet the threatened railroad strike is the best way to avert it. New Hampshire is co-operating with the other New England States in such preparations.—Gov. Albert O. Brown.

VERMONT.

BURLINGTON (Vt.) Oct. 22.—In case of a railroad strike I will use all the resources at my command to maintain order, as well as to feed and protect the people of Vermont during the emergency.—Gov. James Hartness.

CONNECTICUT.

HARTFORD (Ct.) Oct. 22.—All the resources of Connecticut are being marshaled to insure a continuing supply of food to our people and immediate steps will be taken to conserve necessaries. Everything possible will be done to prevent suffering and distress and to preserve law and order in the event of a railroad strike.—Gov. Everett J. Lake.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, Oct. 22.—I have formed a general emergency committee to provide food and fuel for the people. The committee has made a survey of the food and fuel situation throughout the State and is arranging for transportation by motor, water and air in case of a strike. The governors of the other New England States have appointed similar committees. They held a conference in Boston yesterday and all are to work in co-operation.—Gov. Channing H. Cox.

BUREAU OF MARKETS SUMMARIZES TRADE.

REVIEWS MOVEMENT IN LOCAL PRODUCE DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Following is the summary of the trading on the Los Angeles produce market last week, as compiled yesterday by C. L. Brown, local representative of the United States Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates:

"There has been a gradual, but steady decline in apple prices for the past week. Heavy offerings of Yucaipa section fruit of ordinary quality which has been selling at 2-3 cents per pound has tended to lower the price and slow up the movement of the better quality apples on the market. Watsonville bellefleurs, fancy four tier, have dropped from a range of $1.50-$1.60 to $1.25-$1.50; four and one-half tier, fancy, are selling at $1.15-$1.25 per box compared with $1.20-$1.35 a week ago. Loose Jonathans from Utah and Washington still sell at 5-6 cents, but most sales are around 5 cents. Extra fancy Jonathans from Washington sold at $2.90-$3, compared with $3-$3.25 a week ago. The first Oregon Spitzenbergs, extra fancy, sold at $2.75-$3.

"Receipts this week were sixty-eight California, three Oregon, six Utah and two Washington apples, and three cars were diverted compared with fifty-five California, twenty-seven Utah and fourteen Idaho and no diversions a year ago for the corresponding week. Receipts were heavier last year for the same period, but storage holdings are heavier this season, there being 569,809 boxes in storage on October 17, this year, compared with 292,272 boxes last year.

"Potato prices have remained practically unchanged throughout the past week. Stockton Burbanks ranged from $2.50-$3.25 per hundredweight, compared with a range of $2-$2.75 a year ago. Idaho Russets sold at $3, and Idaho rurals, $2.50-$2.60 for United States grade No. 1. The total receipts of potatoes this week were 103 California, twenty-five Idahos, one Montana and two Utahs. Of these twenty-three cars were diverted. A year ago the corresponding week, there were 155 California and six Idahos arrived and forty cars were diverted. Dealers state that the Idaho Russet has been more popular this season than last and to date forty-nine cars have arrived, compared with eighteen cars last year to date.

"National potato shipments have been very heavy for the past week, a total of 10,886 cars being shipped compared with 7580 cars for the corresponding week last year.

"Very few onions are being shipped in at present, only eleven cars arriving during the past week and five of these were diverted, while a year ago for the corresponding week, forty-one cars arrived and sixteen were diverted. Although buying has been light, the market has strengthened and prices average about 25 cents per hundredweight higher than a week ago. Stockton White Globes are selling at $4-$4.25 per hundredweight today, compared with $2-$2.25 a year ago.

"In addition to the large amount of grapes hauled in by truck, sixteen carloads arrived. Table grapes have met with a moderate demand and have held steady at about the same price level. Wine grapes weakened slightly during the early part of the week, but recovered sharply the last two days, especially for black varieties. The best of the black varieties are now selling at $120-$140 per ton. A year ago this date, the grape market was strong, prices ranging from 8-12 cents per pound, according to variety.

"There has been no change in lettuce prices and supply during the week. So far, no improvements in quality have been noted, practically all of the lettuce obtainable having loosely formed heads.

"Pears weakened about a cent per pound during the week. Practically all of the stock is from storage and much of it is of only ordinary quality. Supplies are still liberal. Peaches are about cleaned up, offerings having fallen off sharply.

"Pomegranates have become more plentiful, and prices are lower than a week ago.

"Cucumber offerings declined steadily because of a good outside demand, which took much of the crop away from the local market. A week ago lugs sold at 60-65 cents, but have advanced to 90 cents. Tomatoes are another product which have continued to advance in price. The best ripes and pinks have advanced from 75 cents-$1 per lug to $1.25-$1.50 per lug during the week. Supplies available have fallen off and demand continues good.

"Whatermelons are still plentiful and remain unchanged in price. The movement was very slow until the hot weather, which increased sales considerably. Squash and pumpkins are being offered liberally at prices around 1½ cents per pound. Both lima and string beans have been very irregular in price during the past week, with advances and declines following the supply very closely. Fancy peas are still scarce and high. Much of the stock is ordinary and sells at 7-10 cents per pound, but fancy telephones sold as high as 14 cents.

"During the past week corn and cantaloupes have become unimportant commodities, while cauliflower and celery have become more plentiful. Good cauliflower remained steady at $1.75-$2 per field crate throughout the week, until today, when it dropped about 25 cents, because of liberal offerings. The quality is generally ordinary, but there is some good stock available."

Had Heard That Stuff Before.

When the late Lord Cairns was Lord Chancellor he was an ex-officio visitor of lunatic asylums. He went down one Wednesday, when the peers do not sit, to Hanwell, knocked at the door, and asked to be admitted.

"Can't let you in," said the janitor, "days for visitors Tuesdays and Fridays."

"But I have a right to go inside," said his lordship; "I insist on doing so."

"Read the regulations," and the janitor pointed to them.

"Do you know who I am?" asked Lord Cairns.

"Don't know, and don't care," said the menial.

"I am entitled to admission at any and every hour; I am Lord Chancellor of England."

"Ah! ah!" laughed the janitor, as he shut the entrance gates in the noble lord's face, "we've got four of 'em inside already."—[Argonaut.

WARSAW'S WILD NO MORE.

Relief Worker From Los Angeles Says It's Becoming Regular Health Resort for Investigators.

"Warsaw used to be a wild and uncivilized place, but now is becoming a regular health resort for all the people who wish to investigate conditions in East Central Europe," writes F. F. Holden, a former Los Angeles High School boy, who is in relief work overseas. He has traveled through Latvia, Lithuania, Germany and Poland, and, in a letter to Thomas Caldwell, Young Men's Christian Association boys' work secretary here, he tells of conditions much changed for the better.

Mr. Holden found himself "busted" in Paris in the spring of 1919. How he got a job and his experiences as a relief worker are told as follows:

"I ran into Howard Tracey, who used to be the major of the high school cadets at Los Angeles High School while I was battalion adjutant. He was working for the American Relief Administration in Paris and got me a job with them. They sent me to London to take charge of the statistical department for the United States Grain Corporation. I was there from May 1 until Sept. 1, 1919. Then I was remobilized in Paris and sent as one of the 'baby feeders' to to Lithuania, with headquarters in Kovno. From September, 1919, until February, 1920, I was traveling between Warsaw, Koenigsberg, Vilna and Libau, covering the baby feeding to the best of my ability. In February last year, I was sent to Warsaw and have been here ever since. Warsaw is much the largest office of all our work in the field.

"From February, 1920, until August 1 of this year we have been feeding an average of over 1,000,000 children a day. This has been costing us approximately $1 per child per month. All accounting for the commodities and for the expenses of our Warsaw office has fallen one me. I have enough adding machines working to keep me busy keeping them in repair, and the reports are as wildly exciting as figuring data for a long-range gun.

"A year ago this month I met my wife and little daughter in London. They had been waiting for me there while I was still in Warsaw assisting the Poles to run away from the Bolsheviks. When the Bolsheviks got tired and decided to go home, I went to London and brought them here. In spite of all the suffering and lack of comfort in Poland, we are able to live fairly comfortably."

NEWS OF THE STATE CAPITAL.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 22.—State salaries are still on the increase, despite the recently announced policy of the State Board of Control that all requests for salary raises would be summarily spurned.

The last to benefit from the infraction of the Board of Control mandate are officials of the State Board of Education whose pay checks have been substantially increased.

The favored officials are:

Dr. Edwin R. Snyder, director of vocational education, whose salary was raised from $4000 to $5000 per year; A. C. Olney, commissioner of secondary education, who was given a raise from $4000 to $4500 a year and Mrs. Margaret S. McNaught, commissioner of elementary education, whose pay envelope also was swelled from $4000 to $4500 annually.

These salary advances were recommended to the Board of Control by the States Board of Education and subsequently were approved by the Board of Control.

California residents on the average live fourteen years longer than do the people living elsewhere in the United States, according to the biennial report of the State Board of Health.

The report of the board shows that the average age at death in the United States is about 36 years, at death is approximately 50 while in California the average age years.

Following are figures giving the average age at death of Californians for the last six years:

1914, 49.6 years; 1915, 51.8; 1916, 52.5; 1917, 52; 1918, 40.6 (influenza year;) 1919, 48.9.

The school funds in the various counties in California will not be used after all in meeting the expenses incident to collecting the alien poll tax which recently was declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court.

Attorney-General U. S. Webb in an opinion to Will C. Wood, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, ruled that the expenses so incurred cannot legally be paid out of the school funds, even though they were to have been benefitted by the tax.

In view of the Attorney-General's ruling, the question arises as to what fund the expenses may be charged, but in this school authorities say they are not officially concerned.

The State Board of Forestry has closed a deal for the purchase of 394 acres of redwood timber land along the south fork of the Eel River in Humboldt county as part of its program to preserve the redwoods of Humboldt and Mendocino counties.

The purchase will be made from the Sage Land and Improvement Company of Albany, N. Y., and the price to be paid is $60,000. This money will be taken from the $300,000 appropriated by the 1921 Legislature for the conservation of the giant redwoods, declared to be the oldest living things.

Atty.-Gen. Webb has rendered an opinion to the State Board of Control to the effect that board is authorized under an act of the last Legislature to purchase warrants of the Sacrament-San Joaquin Drainage District. The opinion was asked as the board wished to purchase $50,000 worth of bonds to aid in the construction of a levee on the lower Sacramento River.

Estimates on the future water requirements of California municipalities, study of power development possibilities, location and classifications of reservoirs, and an analysis of the stream flow at the head of the principal rivers of the State, will form the outline of the investigation to be made by the State Department of Engineering under authority of an act of the 1921 Legislature.

"This outline is comprehensive," said Paul Bailey, Deputy Chief Engineer of the Department, who will direct the investigation, "and when completed will yield results of great magnitude. Never before in the State's history has such a widesweeping probe of the water resources of California been undertaken."

Chinese in California are tired of the so-called tong wars. With a view to putting an end to this fatal warfare, an organization known as the Chinese Patriotic Society of San Francisco has been formed and articles of incorporation filed with Secretary of State Jordan.

Another purpose of the organization is to "inculcate in persons of Chinese descent a respect and love for the principles of the constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of California.

Through operation of the part-time school law this year, Edwin R. Snyder, State Commissioner of Vocational Education, estimates the enrollment in part-time schools will increase 10,000.

The sections of the law effective this year provide that minors of the age of 18 years, as well as those of 16 and 17, who have not had a high school education, must attend a part-time school for at least four hours each week.

BUILD ROADS IN ALASKA.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

ANCHORAGE (Alaska) Oct. 22.—Territory on both sides of the United States government railroad being built between Seward and Fairbanks, Alaska, is being penetrated by wagon roads and trails which will serve as feeder lines for the railroad, according to Col. James G. Steese, chairman of the Alaska Road Commission.

During the past year $206,654.82 has been spent on road work in a strip 100 miles wide along the railroad. Several quartz districts have been opened as a result of the road construction, and eventually the mines will provide tonnage for the railroad, it is thought.

Col. Steese has recommended that the government adopt a ten-year road-building program, which will tap every producing district in the railroad area and through connections reach sections in other parts of Alaska distant from the road.

INJURY A FLYING AID.

Woman Air Pioneer Believes Her Crash Good Experience.

Many women admit sometimes "getting up in the air" for one cause or another, but Philadelphia has a visitor who desires to be up in the air all the time, and has been, too, since 1913.

She is Mme. Jane Herveux, and this is an incomplete list of her adventures:

She was the first woman licensed to drive a motor car in France back in 1905.

She was the only woman attached to the flying service of the French army and held a captain's commission in the war, serving as an instructor and in several other capacities.

She has had one wreck—when a wing of her machine collapsed and she hurtled to the flying field, narrowly missing death and receiving gashes on the face and chin.

She is the only woman to hold a commission of captain in the aviation police force of New York City.

She is a devotee of motor car racing and has won prizes and first places in France, and Havana.

She also served as a nurse during the war, and confesses that although she dearly loves flying and fast driving, nursing is her natural field.

She helps conduct a corset shop in New York.

Mme. Herteux is married, but she has retained her maiden name which won her so much renown. Her husband is Philip Caraland—"an American citizen," she says proudly—and mdaame herself is going to make her home in this country, having made arrangements for her mother to come over here to join her and to have her beautiful home in Paris sold. Her husband is a chemist, and madame is avowedly very much interested in his work. That was the main reason she came to Philadelphia, where she is going to inspect a big chemical plant, guided by her husband.

"Does your husband approve your flying?" madame was asked, and she gave one of her quick, fleeting smiles.

"Of course he does," she replied. "But if he did not—well, I've been interested in it for so many years it has become a part of me."

Her accident did not put any fear into madame's heart.

"One doesn't really fly until one injures one's self," she said.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

WHO INVENTED GUNPOWDER?

The Chinese were long credited with the invention of gunpowder, but not long ago evidence was adduced to indicate that this is a mistake and that the Arabians did not, as commonly supposed, introduce gunpowder into Europe during the eighth and ninth centuries, says the Washington Star. It is believed by the most competent authorities now that the manufacture of the first gunpowder was based upon the "Fire Book" of Marcus Graecus, which appeared in Constantinople about the middle of the thirteenth century. This was the source from which Roger Bacon, Albertus Magnus and Thomas Aquinas derived their knowledge of gunpowder. The first use of gunpowder to drive projectiles is ascribed to a monk, Berthold Schwartz, whose discovery was make accidentally while preparing the mixture for medicinal purposes.

At the Seaside.

It is to be hoped that visitors to the seaside this summer will have a different experience from the woman who wrote to a friend as follows: "There is nothing high here, but the prices, the staircases, and the eggs; nothing low but the sea and the company; nothing strong but the butter, and nothing weak but the tea."—[Exchange.

Pepper trees are to flank the entire eight acres and the land independent of the sacred graden is to be developed as a public park for picnics and recreation. An old adobe structure near the center is to be renovated and established as a museum for relics at the time when mission fathers dealt in hides and tallow. A gully at the southern end of the holding is to be utilized for keeper's headquarters.

The plan as depicted by the park commissioners is a dream of loveliness and will afford modern conveniences and comforts. To further popularize the Mission Gardens it is proposed to establish at the south end of the grounds a Spanish restaurant where the wayfarer may find real Spanish dishes.

BURBANK HAS BIG DAY IN INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT.

China Factory Finished, Aluminum Plant Breaks Ground and Thirty Homes Begun in Single Day.

Burbank, eleven miles north of the business center of Los Angeles, quietly celebrated a big day last Tuesday in the progress of its industrial development, in choosing the 'day when the Empire China Company poured its first hollow ware, on which to make the actual start on two other big enterprises.

It being the eighth monthly anniversary of the starting of work on the china plant, and as the china company had set that day eight months ago as the date for beginning operations, Superintendent Rowe made it a point to make good by pouring a dozen each of pitchers, casseroles, round and oblong vegetable dishes, which, when finished, will be distributed among the officers and stockholders as souvenirs of the inauguration of what they declare is the finest chinaware pottery in the world, in both buildings and modern character of its kilns and mechanical equipment.

Visiting potters from other States and foreign countries, who have inspected the plant in recent weeks, said Vice-President I. R. Landis, have expressed themselves as amazed at the magnitude and the high character of the equipment, and declared it to be a distinct step forward in the chinaware industry.

Plans Completed for New Three Story Addition

Plans and arrangements for the construction of a three-story addition to the Kellow & Brown Building at the southwest corner of Boyd and Omar streets have practically been completed, according in an announcement made last week.

The addition will be of reinforced concrete and will be divided into stores on the ground floor and lofts for light manufacturing on the upper floors. It will be occupied in part by the Kellow & Brown Printing Company.

It is estimated that the new building will represent a capital investment of approximately $25,000.

F. J. Huesman of the commercial properties department of the W. A. Heitman Company handled the negotiations for Kellow & Brown. The Heitman company has also been appointed exclusive agent for handling the leases on the new building.

SOUTHWEST THEATER.

Al Nelson has been awarded the general contract for a new theater and store building to be built on Vermont avenue, near Slauson, for F. W. Braun. The building will contain a theater and fifteen stores. H. C. Deckbar is the architect.

FACT AND COMMENT.

The encouragement of building, as one solution to the unemployment problem is urged in a recent bulletin sent out by President Hiett, of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, to member realty boards throughout the country. In this bulletin Mr. Hiett brings out three main points to be considered by the local boards in their campaign to stimulate building activity.

Briefly summarized, these suggestions are to make money more readily available to the public through banks and loan associations, to turn the light of pitiless publicity upon dealers in building materials who are holding prices at a higher level than is warranted by circumstances, and to reach, as directly as possible, the prospective builder, whether of homes or of commercial properties, in order to urge him to proceed with his plans.

The suggestions are all good, and if worked out would undoubtedly have an appreciable effect upon building activity. Locally, the realty board will not have much of a task upon its hands, for prospective builders do not need any great degree of urging to go ahead with their plans. This is attested by the tremendous amount of building which has been going on in all parts of the city throughout the summer, an activity which has proceeded merrily despite a number of discouraging features, including high cost of many of the essential materials, and the difficulty of obtaining money readily for building purposes.

Undoubtedly the resumption of building activity throughout the country on a large scale would be a long step toward the solution of the problem of finding work for the unemployed. It would mean work not only for those directly employed in the construction of buildings, but work in the many affiliated industries, which supply the builders with their material. Unskilled labor, also, is used in much of the rough work involved in building, and employment therefore, would be opened to others than skilled artisans.

More Than Propaganda.

Resumption of building activity on a scale commensurate with our present needs would be a powerful panacea for the unemployment evil. But to bring about this desired result, something more than mere "build now" propaganda is needed. A constructive and well-planned campaign must be launched. The public must be shown that, where building costs are high, there is a sound economic reason for their being high, and that there is an equally good reason why there will be no sudden and overwhelming reduction in prices, wiping out the investment made in good faith. Simmered down, it means that the full confidence of the public must be restored, and this can be done only by letting the public get a glimpse, now and then, of what goes on behind the scenes.

This lack of confidence, which applies generally to the country, is conspicuous by its absence in Southern California. Already the value of new buildings erected in Los Angeles this year is in excess of the entire total for last year, and building, according to building department officials, is on the increase, rather than the decrease. The spirit of confidence in the future which

PLAN TO GOVERN CITY'S GROWTH.

Regional Conference Will be Held This Week.

Board of Supervisors to Aid Planning Commission.

Unified City From Mountains to Sea Visualized.

BY R. F. McCLELLAN,
Chairman of the County Board of Supervisors.

The Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors has called into conference on Wednesday, October 26, representatives of all of the incorporated municipalities in the county. So far as is known, this is the first instance of such a conference under similar circumstances ever held in the country. The purposes of the conference and the objects that it is hoped to accomplish constitute an act of the most far-reaching importance to the welfare of the future of this district.

That portion of Los Angeles county between the San Gabriel River and the mountains to the ocean in both directions is dotted with thriving municipalities, each of which is growing with unprecedented rapidity. The showing made by the recent Federal census and a careful examination of the map of this district force us to the startling conclusion that all of the district mentioned is destined at an early date to become one gigantic and almost solidly developed community.

The process through which this tremendous community is developing is through the combined growth of the many cities and county territory within its confines. Each municipality is rapidly expanding from year to year and spreading its limits closer and closer to its neighboring communities. In this respect the process resembles the spreading of a spot of ink on blotting paper.

CONTIGUOUS CITIES.

Already several of the municipalities have become contiguous, such as that group formed by Burbank, Glendale, Eagle Rock, Pasadena, South Pasadena, Alhambra and Los Angeles; likewise the cities of Santa Monica and Venice and on the South Coast the cities of Long Beach and Los Angeles, and still the process continues. Open spaces are gradually being filled in and the sparsely settled borders of the various municipalities rapidly becoming congested. The situation is as yet one that can be controlled. It is still flexible and amenable to intelligent planning. In a few years this will not be the case. Then it will be too late and the people of this district will be forced to the attitude now taken by so many communities and expressed in the words, "If only we had known a few years ago what was going to prevail today, how differently we would have planned."

ONE BIG COMMUNITY.

Today Los Angeles, Pasadena, Long Beach, Santa Monica, and the many other cities are gradually becoming one great community where all of us are optimistically certain of what we are to be a few years hence. It is for the purpose of making a practical use of our optimism and foresight by way of combining our efforts and our method into one gigantic program of development, to the end that as the municipalities coalesce there shall be no physical break or obstruction between the two and to all intents and purposes they shall become one harmonious physical whole and function to the highest degree of efficiency and economy, that this regional conference has been called.

This is the purpose of the regional planning conference. It is a move wholly and solely of co-operation between the various municipalities and the county, and it is a pleasure for the Board of Super-

Remarkable Values

Palisades lots are remarkable values because they were developed and all improvements put in and paid for before the war. While land prices have gone wild—out of practical reach in many cases—and abnormal development costs have been added to those high prices to prepare subdivisions for sale, Palisades lots, fully and beautifully developed, have been raised very little in price.

LICENSE PLATES ARE MADE HERE.

New Factory Started This Week for Producer.

Over 700,000 Pairs Are Needed for 1922.

Also Manufacture Sheet Metal Accessories for Autos.

All the metal license plates for automobiles used in the State of California are made right here in Los Angeles. This year the requirements were 1,340,000, or 670,000 pairs, and the manufacturers have been advised to prepare 700,000 pairs for next year, which are already well under way toward completion. The new plates will be white body with blue lettering.

This fact as divulged by the breaking ground during the past week for a new factory for the Kittle Manufacturing Company, at the northeast corner of Santa Fe avenue and Jessie street, opposite the present leased quarters of the plant.

The Austin company is the designer and builder of the new factory, which John Harnish, Pacific Coast manager, states will cost about $40,000, and work will be pushed so that it will be ready for occupancy by the first of the year.

The new factory will have a frontage of 160 feet on Santa Fe avenue and 140 feet on Jessie street. It will be one story, except at the corner, where a second story, 80 by 40 feet, will give 3200 square feet of space for offices and employees' rest rooms. The structure will be concrete, brick, steel and glass, slate surfaced roof with monitor style of lighting and ventilating.

The Kittle Manufacturing Company is not incorporated, being owned and operated by R. H. Pritchard and C. F. Leonard, who state that their investment, by the time the building is completed and equipped, will be more than $100,000.

The business is that of metal stamping and enameling. Besides the license plates, which has been so far considered more of a side issue to keep the factory going in slack seasons, a miscellaneous number of automobile accessories are manufactured, such as luggage carriers, and other specialties patented and exclusively made in this plant.

LICENSE GROWTH.

When the Kittle company secured the first contract with the State for license plates in 1917, only 236,000 pairs were required. This number has increased at the rate of about 125,000 a year, until next year's requirement of 700,000 sets is the largest in the country next to the State of New York.

Mr. Pritchard states that special automatic machinery of their own invention enables the Los Angeles plant to manufacture plates more economically than any other in the United States, and when their new plant is in operation they expect to be able to supply other States besides California, in competition with other manufacturers elsewhere.

The factory at present employs about forty hands, which it is expected to double when the new factory is at full production. It is expected to enter the field of metal signs on a large scale. Contracts are already being made with automobile clubs and civic organizations for auxiliary signs to be attached to license plates, indicating the town or city from which the car comes.

Thousands of tons of steel plates are used annually in the metal products of this plant, and the proprietors, like others in the metal trades are expectantly looking forwards to the establishment of steel and rolling mills in this city, as a relief from the freight handicap on steel shipments from the eastern mills.

BURBANK PLANT IN OPERATION.

eight acres across San Fernando Boulevard from these two plants into 167 lots and the immediate erection of the first thirty homes to be built for the employees of the china factory.

THE CHINA FACTORY.

I. R. Landis, the father of the china factory, while not himself a practical china manufacturer, has become more or less familiar with it during his residence in Philadelphia. During a vacation trip in the Rockies about four years ago, his attention was called to the deposits of china clay in Lincoln county, Nev., and in company with ceramic engineers, he inspected them and, foreseeing their value in the creation of Pacific Coast pottery interests, he purchased them without hesitation, and immediately proceeded to interest Fred E. Keeler of this city, who is also one of the largest manufacturers of brick and tile in the United States, with several plants at Mason City, Iowa.

Mr. Keeler joined him in purchase of the china clay deposits, on the strength of the engineers' reports, the two forming the American Clay Company, which absorbed all the lands containing the china clay. The next step was a year's research work in a small pottery in Los Angeles, under the direction of John Rowe, considered one of the best experts in the country, having been for fifteen years superintendent of production at the Zanesville (O.) works of the American Encaustic Tile Company.

The fine translucent china produced in the course of this year of experimenting proved the quality of the clays to both Keeler and Landis, and the Empire China Company was incorporated for $500,000, all of which has been subscribed and paid in. Eleven acres were purchased in Burbank for a factory site, Burbank being chosen because of its location on the gas and oil pipe lines from Bakersfield, and as the junction point of the valley and coast lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

DEVELOPMENT OF PLANS.

Since that time all the development work has been under the personal direction of Mr. Landis. His first step was to associate John Rowe permanently with the enterprise as construction superintendent on buildings and production superintendent for the completed works. Next he interested W. G. Jackson, then general manager of the Taylor, Smith & Taylor potteries at East Liverpool, O., who immediately came to Los Angeles and assumed the presidency and general managership of the Empire China Company. An interesting note is the fact that Mr. Jackson learned the pottery business in the East Liverpool works of Homer Laughlin.

With this personnel, considered by Mr. Landis the strongest obtainable in the United States, the work of planning and building the model plant at Burbank has been pushed through the most difficult period of building and shipping following the war, which has caused many delays, but no discouragement, resulting in the completed plant in which the first ware was poured last week.

W. G. Jackson, as president and general manager, is authority for the statement that, with finishing touches in the equipment, limited production will be started by November 5, and that the first completed wares will be ready soon after the first of December, after which work will be pushed on acquiring the necessary help in the various departments with progressive increase in production until capacity has been reached. Foremen and skilled potters from the East have been engaged and the nucleus of the working staff and eastern workers.

THE PLANT.

The plant at Burbank is one of the finest industrial structures in Southern California, built of brick, steel, glass and terra cotta, and is the subject of comment by the thousands of tourists who pass it on the San Fernando Road.

The present first unit will have a capacity of 3000 pieces of finished china daily, which will represent annual turnover of about $800,000. It consists of eleven kilns—three biscuit, four gloss and four decorating kilns—about which are grouped so as to secure continuous operation without lost motion all the various departments for clay mixing, mold making, molding, drying, glazing, decorating, etc.; a factory for making the saggers in which the wares are contained when undergoing the burning process in the kilns; warehousing, packing and shipping rooms; and commodious offices on the second floor front, where cafeteria and rest rooms for the employees will also be provided.

This being the first pottery for fine china on the Pacific Coast, and because of its eminence as the latest word in china pottery construction, it is the intention of the management, soon after the plant is in full operation, to set aside a day for the public to visit and become familiar with the making of china. Offers from South America to take the entire product for a term of years have been refused, and it is the intention to manufacture for Pacific Coast home and hotel requirements exclusively, but to build additions as quickly as possible for supplying other domestic and foreign demands.

ALUMINUM FACTORY.

To Mrs. M. E. Thomas of Pittsburg, one of the largest stockholders in the American Aluminum-Metal Products Company, fell the privilege of launching the construction of the new metal spinning and stamping plant, in the presence of the resident officers and directors, and a few invited guests, on the same day.

The aluminum factory immediately adjoins the chinaware plant, fronting on San Fernando Road, where it has acquired five and a half acres from the J. M. Schulties estate, including a two-story residence now used for the company's offices. When this plant is completed the residence will be moved to the west end of the site and turned into a clubhouse and cafeteria for the employees.

From the time of the groundbreaking work on the foundations has been pushed by Farley & Farley, the contractors, for the first unit of the factory, to involve about 50,000 square feet at a cost of about $75,000. It is to be of brick, steel glass and terra cotta and follow closely the style of the neighboring china plant.

William E. Duersten, the vice-president and general manager, states that the plans contemplate completion of the plant and transfer of the machinery equipment from New Castle, Pa., so that manufacturing can begin about March 1 of next year.

It is expected that about 200 people will be employed in this unit when it is in full production. Applications from metal workers are being received from all over the United States for employment. Even from foreign countries applications are being received, he says, as the result of previous announcement regarding the proposed plant published in The Times; all of which are from experienced workers, many of whom will be brought to Los Angeles for employment in the Burbank plant.

THE PRODUCT.

This plant will manufacture a complete line of aluminum kitchen and table utensils; will make brass and aluminum castings; also all sorts of household and business wire goods, brass and copper goods in great variety, metal hotel wares, metal premium goods, etc. Preliminary covering of the sales territory as far east as Denver has shown lively interest, and a number of actual orders for certain of the company's specialties, to be delivered in large quantities.

Recent additions to the directorate include George Mittinger, a manufacturer and engineer of Youngstown, O., and George B. Roberts, a Kansas City engineer, the latter of whom has made a substantial investment in the company and has moved to this city, expecting to be active in the operation of the plant and business. He has been prominent in telephone construction in various parts of the country, and twenty years ago built the Pasadena lines.

BUILDING HOMES.

Work on the subdividing of the thirty-eight acres for employees of the china factory was started on the same day, and the laying out of streets, grading, curbing, paving and laying of gas and water mains is being pushed by Edwards & Wildey for a total of 137 homes, ranging in cost from $2800 to $6500 each.

Twenty different designs have been prepared for frame and stucco houses, and a total of thirty will be rushed to completion, including one or more of each design.

The new streets in the subdivision will be named Keeler, Landis, Jackson, Church and Morgan, in honor of the men at the head of the enterprise, while John Rowe will be distinguished in fathering Rowe avenue. The new street to connect San Fernando with the new Glendale boulevard will be known as Empire street, and the street given to the city between the china and aluminum factories is to be known as China street.

Lumber for the thirty houses is being unloaded in carloads at the Glendale plant of Edwards & Wildey for fabrication, so that the work of completion of the houses may be forwarded while the street work is being done, and their readiness for occupancy hastened.

As a one-day record of completion of one and the starting of two enterprises of the magnitude of these undertakings, Burbank residents believe this puts them on the map as well up toward the top among the industrial communities of Southern California, and it is stated by their Chamber of Commerce officials that negotiations pending indicate several other new enterprises will shortly be advanced to where they can be announced as sure additions to the rapidly expanding industrial community.

Bank to Erect New Branch on Vermont Avenue

A noteworthy improvement for the southwest section of the city will be started in the near future by the California Bank, which has acquired the property at the southwest corner of Vermont avenue and Washington street, and will erect upon this site a new branch bank and store buildings. The property has a frontage of 130 feet on Vermont avenue and 153 feet on Washington street.

The corner, 30 by 60 feet, will be occupied by the new banking room, while the remainder of the structure will be designed for modern stores, of which there will be seven on Washington street and six on Vermont avenue.

The exterior of the building will be finished in glazed terra cotta, while the store fronts will be of the most modern type, and will embrace a number of new features. This will be the twenty-third branch to be started by the California Bank. Construction of the new building, which was designed by Architects Walker & Eisen, will be started on November 1.

BUSINESS CORNER SOLD.

Lord & Sieling, Hollywood realty brokers, report the sale of the business property at the southwest corner of Sunset Boulevard and Sierra Bonita avenue to Ross Howe for a consideration of approximately $28,000. The lot has a frontage of 70 feet on Sunset Boulevard, and the transfer was made at the rate of approximately $400 per front foot. The property is in the center of the rapidly growing West Hollywood business district.

HERMOSA BEACH WILL CONTINUE ADVERTISING

The Hermosa Beach Chamber of Commerce recently inaugurated an intensive advertising campaign for the purpose of attracting winter tourists to the beach city. The results to date have been so gratifying that the chamber, at its last meeting, voted to continue the campaign.

New residents who have recently located at Hermosa Beach include Dr. John S. Miller of Los Angeles, Edgard Mitchell of Oxnard, O. B. Lensing of Santa Ana, Isabel M. Barratt of Glendale, Harry C. Fillman of Los Angeles, Mrs. Margarite Lee of Upland, Miss Helen L. Halsey and Miss Catherine H. Bassett of Pasadena, Oscar Tarode of Los Angeles and A. E. Glass of Los Angeles.

Building permits for new homes are now being issued at the rate of more than one per day. The total of building permits for the first nine months of this year is more than double the amount issued during the same period in 1920.

OWENS LAKE IS SOURCE OF SODA

Has Only Plant in the World of Its Kind.

Big Lake Contains Soda in Saturated Solution.

Capacity Reached, Plant Now Preparing Extensions.

Following the publication of the strike order, to become effective October 30, there poured into the offices of the Natural Soda Products Company at Keeler, on Owens Lake, extra orders for immediate shipment to glass factories and soap factories in Los Angeles and San Francisco of over a million pounds of soda from the company's plant at that point, for delivery during the past week, according to the statement of W. W. Watterson, president of the company, who is stopping at the Alexandria.

Mr. Watterson is in active charge of the great soda industry on Owens Lake, which is one of the fundamental or basic industries upon which the industrial development of Los Angeles and Southern California is to a considerable extent predicated.

The company's holdings and plant at Keeler include ownership of a five-mile frontage on and adjoining the lake, a huge chemical plant, railroad trackage and other equipment, representing an actual investment of about $750,000, and there are now in process of construction and completion additions to this plant which will enable them to procure light ash and other forms of industrial soda, for an increase of its field.

PRESENT CAPACITY.

The capacity of the present plant is 25,000 tons annually of commercial soda ash, and its shipments have steadily grown until it is confidently expected the full productive capacity will be reached before the first of the coming year; whereupon the extensions under way are looked to for a considerable increase of the present capacity.

The Owens Lake plant, because Owens Lake is the only place where nature has provided an alkaline body of water saturated with soda like the first process in a soda manufacturing plant, is the only plant in the world where soda is secured by precipitation from the water itself. The usual process is to make soda from salt by chemical reactions, and such is the method universally employed except in Southern California. Inyo county, in which Owens Lake and Keeler are located, according to United States Geological reports, is the richest county in this country in chemical and metallic mineral resources.

IS BASIC NEED.

Aside from its use in the domestic arts and medicinally in the form of bicarbonate of soda, this same mineral is an indispensable adjunct, at some point, in more industries than any other one substance, according to general testimony of chemical engineers; and its presence in practically inexhaustible quantity in the waters of the Owens River, gathered from its headwaters in the high Sierras, is regarded by the Chamber of Commerce and by the industrial world of Los Angeles as one of the important considerations in the establishment at this point of miscellaneous manufacturing enterprises.

Soda, in the form of so-called soda ash, which is the form in which it is shipped from the Keeler plant, is an essential in all glass-making, in china glaze, in all cleansing compounds, in soap, in paper-making, in the heavy pulp products for paper-shipping cases, in leather tanning, in wool scouring, in all laundry work, in oil and sugar refining and many other industries. The Inyo county supply in the waters of Owens Lake is capable of reduction to a commercial basis more cheaply than by reduction from salt; and it is claimed for it that it is as pure and as desirable as the best product from any of the eastern sources.

PLANT AT KEELER.

The industry had its start way back in 1882, when a small plant for the production of crude soda was established by the late D. O. Mills; but it was not until 1908 that the present National Soda Products Company was formed with a capitalization of $1,000,000, and it is only in the last four years that it has come into large production under the controlling ownership of the brothers, W. W. and M. Q. Watterson.

The Watterson brothers have been for twenty years operating in and are among the leading financial and commercial factors in Inyo county development, being large land holders, breeders of Short-horn cattle and heads of four State banks—the Inyo County and the Owens Valley at Bishop, the Inyo County at Big Pine and the Inyo County at Independence.

THE PROCESS.

The process of this, the only plant in the world that extracts pure soda from natural lake water, necessitates the use of carbon dioxide gas to form the bicarbonate, which is then changed to soda ash by a heat process known as furnacing. The carbon dioxide gas is made at the plant from pure white marble in which Inyo county abounds, and the company owns its own marble quarries, about five miles from the plant, affording an inexhaustible supply of this necessity. Under the company's process the marble yields 40 per cent of its volume in the required gas.

The plant of the Natural Soda Products Company has become an established institution of Southern California and has reached its capacity production, which is to be increased. With the rapid increase of industrial establishments and population it is assumed that further increases will be necessary before long, and W. W. Watterson is at present at the Alexandria Hotel with the intent of interesting local capital in the extension work to the extent of about a quarter of a million.

DRIVE FOR NEW MEMBERS.

The membership drive of the California Real Estate Association will end on Thursday, October 27, when every member is requested to devote a half-day to building up the association's enrollment.

The directors of the association indorsed the drive and will give the time from 9 to 12 next Thursday morning in behalf of the State work. A proclamation was issued by the directors to the membership inviting their co-operation.

The State association, whose headquarters are at Oakland, has a membership of nearly 1300. More than 400 members were added during August, when many real estate men availed themselves of the refund of the 1917 fee to join the association.

There are now thirty-five real estate boards in California, and the list, it is expected, will be increased to forty by the first of the year. Every city of 2000 or 3000 or more is entitled to a real estate board, and brokers are showing an active interest in joining the association.

ANNOUNCE ADVANCE IN PRICE.

Cost of Ready-Cut Houses to be Increased Owing to New Lumber Schedule.

Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., local manufacturers of ready-cut houses, announced yesterday an advance in prices, which will become effective next Friday, October 28. The increased cost of lumber, which recently went up in price, as well as of other building materials, is given as the reason for the advance in the cost of ready-cut houses.

"Although, lumber prices have advanced during the past two weeks, we have not as yet increased our list prices, but we will be forced to withdraw present prices on October 27, and place into effect the new price range," said W. P. Butte, president of the local firm, yesterday. "We regret to see lumber climbing upward, but prospective home builders can protect themselves by building their home immediately or at least placing their order for their home.

"There is a decided shortage of lumber, and the chances of even holding lumber prices at the present increased rates are slight. If the railroad strike materializes, we will be forced to pay high premium prices on building material, such as existed two years ago, or we may be even unable to secure sufficient lumber.

"As a protection to our customers we are withholding our price advance until next Friday morning, but after that date present prices will no longer obtain.

"During the past three days we have accepted orders for 150 houses, and during the next four days, anticipate the biggest amount of business ever received in our history. Our mills are operating at full capacity."

FACT AND COMMENT.

pervades Southern California must be inculcated in the depressed eastern communities before the solution of the unemployment problem through building activity can be reached.

Normally there is a decline in building during the last three months of the year—although October now seems in a fair way to establish a new high record. Probably the months of November and December will be somewhat less active, but that there will be no real slowing up in the building is evidenced by the number of lots, mostly for residences, which are being sold in all parts of the city.

Real estate men report an unprecedented demand for unimproved lots in the residential sections of the city, a report which is borne out by the number of instruments recorded daily. Residential property is moving in heavy volume, and all of this means the erection now, or at a not very distant date, of new houses, flats and apartments.

An unusual feature about the building records of the past two months is the fact that they have been established largely on the erection of new residences—which augurs well for the continuation, even though on a somewhat smaller basis, of this type of building activity. If only a comparatively small percentage of the lots involved in resent transfers are improved by their new owners, it will mean a great deal of work for architects and contractors for months to come.

Civic Hospitality.

The All-Year Round advertising campaign seems to be bearing direct and tangible results, judging from the number of tourists who are pouring into Los Angeles by automobile and train. Railroad officials predict that this season will be the biggest yet in the number of new visitors, while the Auto Club estimates that more than 7000 people per month are arriving by automobile.

Since these people are, in a sense, our invited guests, it is incumbent upon the city to show at least a degree of hospitable interest in their welfare. Those who come by train naturally go to the hotels and apartments, which are now showing a tendency to reduce their rates. From present indications it seems that there will be less difficulty in the matter of exorbitant charges at the hotels this year than last.

But many of the automobile tourists do not wish to go to the hotels; they prefer to camp, and for that purpose they carry camping equipment. The city has established a number of camping places, where these visitors can make themselves at home in a rough-and-ready fashion, but the city lags in the creation of up-to-date tourist parks.

The lead in the establishment of camping grounds of this type has been taken by the thriving little city of Boise, Idaho, which set aside the ground, built a community kitchen, with all modern conveniences, a laundry with complete electrical equipment, a washing platform for automobiles, and a community hall. The Boise Tourist Park has proven a great asset to that city, and the establishment of one or more of them at the principal entrances to Los Angeles would prove no less valuable to this community.

TO CONTROL CITY'S GROWTH.

visors to take the initiative in a move of this character and point out the way if possible to all of the other thriving municipalities in the county wherein through the practice of co-operation each municipality can profit to the greatest degree from the experiences of its neighbors and each contribute to the greatest degree to its own development and the development of that greater district of which they are a part and which is unquestionably destined to become the greatest community in the union.

WATER ROUTE JULY RECORD.

Los Angeles Harbor Shipping Gains Reported.

Oil and Cotton Lead in Bulk and Value.

Twenty-eight Countries Unloaded Goods Here.

Raw cotton and petroleum products continued to take the lead in the exports from Los Angeles to foreign countries in the month of July, according to the monthly report of the commerce of the port for July, which has just been issued by the Los Angeles Harbor Department.

England took all of the cotton exported, amounting to 2200 bales, valued at $137,247. Japan, the other foreign customer for our cotton, shipped none from Los Angeles in July, which is late in the season for cotton to move. There were domestic shipments to the Atlantic seaboard, however, amounting to 561 tons and valued at $336,600.

TRANS-PACIFIC OIL.

Three Pacific countries bought fuel oil and kerosene from Los Angeles in July, to the value of $580,000. Japan took more than three million gallons of kerosene, with a value of $405,405. The Philippine Islands bought 3,000,000 gallons of fuel and gas oil, valued at $105,000; and Chile took 1,680,000 gallons of fuel and gas oil, valued at $70,000.

A large variety of merchandise was shipped to Mexico during the month, but the aggregate value was comparatively small, only $84,170. The list shows 135 different commodities exported to Mexico in July. These were more than 260,000 yards of cotton cloth, valued at nearly $40,000, among these exports. Other important items were $4100 worth of medicinal preparations; 50,150 pounds of soap with a value of $3496; $2642 worth of silk goods; a $5000 marine engine; more than 50,000 pounds of hides, valued at $2500; and nearly $10,000 worth of men's shoes.

Total exports in July to all foreign countries amounted to $832,831.

An astonishing fact in connection with domestic imports; i. e. Los Angeles shipments to other American ports, is that they aggregated approximately 240,000 tons, with a value of nearly $7,000,000. Three or four years ago the entire commerce of the port was not that great. Fuel oil and gasoline are responsible for the large domestic exports to United States ports.

UNLOADED HERE.

Imports came from twenty-eight different foreign countries, with a total value of $1,183,165. Canada leads the list on account of more than 2600 tons of print paper imported from that country, but Belgium came second, and Japan third.

The largest single item, aside from the paper and about $110,000 worth of lumber from Canada, was $77,393 worth of crude rubber from Singapore.

For several months window glass from Belgium was the largest item of import, but in July it amounted to less than 400 tons, with a value slightly in excess of $40,000. Pig iron to the amount of 1548 tons and steel ingots aggregating 2602 tons also came from Belgium. The combined value of these two products was more than $97,000.

We brought in 360,441 pounds of coffee from Colombia in July, valued at $52,257.

The principal item imported from Japan was 230,000 yards of cotton goods, with a value of nearly $50,000.

The countries from which imports came were as follows:

Canada	$ 812,548
Belgium	151,102
Japan	129,598
England	94,987
Straits Settlements	77,393
Colombia	53,987

Dutch East Indies	677

Total	$1,183,165

BIG TOTALS.

The total commerce of the port for the month, both inbound and outbound, was 343,947 tons, with a value of $16,039,019. Of this, 71,007 was inbound commerce, and 273,840 tons was outbound.

One feature of the month's business was that the lumber imports were little more than one-fourth the normal amount, being only 15,718,491 feet, or 25,369 tons, with a value of $403,784.

The imports from the Atlantic seaboard were 19,447 tons, with a value of $3966; while the exports to Atlantic ports were 9715 tons, valued at $1,322,272.

Another feature is that there were 238 arrivals of ships at Los Angeles during the month, with a net tonnage of 465,843. This indicates that the average size and draught of vessels now making this port is nearly double what it was four or five years ago.

Just What You've Been Looking For

A lovely home, with spacious grounds. Large rooms and everything for comfort and enjoyment.

722 So. Wilton Place

YES, Madam, I'll speak of these things as we go along, and you will see that they are better than the description.

"The lot is nice and large, 50 by 150 feet, and there are not many where the grounds, shrubbery and flowers set off a Bungalow home to such good advantage.

"The great, spacious front porch, overhung with greenery and flowers, invites you. To say there are six large rooms with roomy closets does not give you an idea of the really beautiful, harmonious interior; it gives one a sense of pleasure just to be there.

"The dining room and breakfast room have each a built-in buffet, a great convenience indeed. The interior finish is hand-rubbed, with hardwood floors throughout. Then there is the living room with its open fireplace; two bedrooms with bath; screened porch at the rear. Don't fail to note the fine lighting fixtures.

"There is a basement, with gas furnace, and a double garage, with outside servants' quarters. I doubt if you have ever seen nicer grounds with a home of this character.

"I almost forgot to say that the beautiful matched draperies and the potted plants go with the house, which, by the way, is within 1½ blocks of Wilshire Boulevard.

"The price is only $10,500, with terms if desired. There is no better bargain in the city, location and price considered."

EASTERN FIRM OPENS DISTRIBUTING BRANCH.

Another eastern concern, attracted by the remarkable growth and prosperity of Southern California, has announced the opening of a Los Angeles branch. Henry C. Earle, representing the Barbe-McKenzie Corporation of New Yor, large manufacturers of drapery goods, has taken a lease on large quarters on the fifth floor of the Meredith Building at 618 South Spring street. At this location a complete wholesale stock of this company's products will be carried to serve the growing demand for them in this territory. The transaction was made by the W. Ross Campbell Company through R. Q. Brown of its sales and leasing department.

The same firm reports the leasing of the Hotel George at the northwest corner of Hope and Tenth street by J. J. Davis to Robert Hankins; the store at 528 West Eighth street by George Walker to H. W. Eager for a restaurant; the store at 519 East Ninth street for Dr. Hill Hastings to Lottie Wright, for a restaurant; and the hotel at 416 South Stanford avenue by the Guaranty Trust Company to Roland Derscheid.

MARKET SOLD.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ORANGE COVE, Oct. 22.—J. P. Furman has just closed a deal for the sale of his meat market to J. R. Rayborn of Visalia, and his uncle, R. F. Rayborn, who recently arrived from Canada. The new owners plan installation of a new refrigerating plant and a number of other improvements.

FORD CHANGES LOCAL PLANT.

Starts Manufacturing Here in Place of Assembling.

Converts Present Building to Factory Basis.

Lays Foundation for Greatest Adjunct to Detroit.

The six-story and basement brick and terra cotta building of the Ford Motor Company at the southwest corner of Santa Fe avenue and Seventh street, which for the past seven years has been the most prominent architectural feature of the close-in industrial district, has been changed from an assembling unit to a manufacturing unit of the Ford organization, and is approaching completion in its manufacturing equipment, according to B. L. Graves, district manager of the Ford interests.

During the war years this assembling plant was practically shut down, and instead of resuming operations along the old lines, when resumption of business was made possible a year and a half ago, it was decided to make Los Angeles a manufacturing plant, in pursuance of a new policy on the part of Henry Ford, under which it is planned to establish manufacturing plants in various parts of the country, instead of further concentrating manufacture at Detroit.

Los Angeles was chosen for the same reasons that are influencing other manufacturers in locating here, and, according to Manager Graves, it has already been proven that Los Angeles can manufacture more economically than the Detroit plant. He attributes this largely to the all-year climate, which keeps the men at their best for twelve months, without slow-downs for winter or storms.

Under the Ford system a "target" is set for each operation, representing the maximum production expected of the men. In the Los Angeles plant thus far, he says, they have had no difficulty in beating the target; and as a result, progressive increases in the manufacturing at this point are planned, until eventually all the operations of the Detroit automobile plant will be duplicated at the Los Angeles works. An additional five acres have been purchased on Alhambra Road near Eastlake Park, which will eventually be the site of further factory buildings.

PRODUCTS.

New machinery has been installed throughout the building for various operations which it was decided would effect economies for the Rocky Mountain-Pacific Coast district, which is administered from Los Angeles, and includes the eleven States of this section of the country. This equipment includes boilers, a multiplicity of jigs, cotton-processing machinery and a body-building plant.

At the Los Angeles plant all the cotton and hair upholstering material for seats and tonneau used in the West is now manufactured. All the seats and upholstering are also made here, including the making of the coiled springs, the frames and the upholstery work itself, these being shipped from Los Angeles to the assembling plant at San Francisco in carload lots.

The manufacture of sedan bodies complete, from stamped sections shipped here from Detroit, has reached a daily production of twenty-five such bodies a day, and this capacity is to be increased.

WESTERN HEADQUARTERS.

Los Angeles, by this change, becomes the Ford headquarters for all the territory West of the Rockies; in line with the national movement that is concentrating on Southern California for the industrial expansion that inevitably follows increased population, says Mr. Graves, who is enthusiastic over the showing already made, and on which he predicates continued increases in Ford holdings and Ford manufacturing here.

The present manufacturing operations require about 200 employees, which will be gradually increased to 300 as the new machinery is installed, which will be the limit until additional plants become necessary. While not assuming to speak for Mr. Ford, Mr. Graves states it as his personal conviction that Los Angeles will eventually be the most important adjunct of the Detroit plant, by reason of the ability to maintain maximum production the year round, because of the climatic and satisfactory labor conditions that enable workers to turn out more goods in a given time than in any other district in the United States.

Famous Resort Near Claremont Changes Hands.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CLAREMONT, Oct. 21.—An important deal has been closed by Frank Wheeler of Claremont whereby Miss Elizabeth D. Palmer has sold her property, known as "Palmer Canyon," above Claremont, to C. S. Phillips, a Los Angeles capitalist, for a cash consideration of $30,000.

Palmer Canyon, one of the favorite resorts in the east end of Los Angeles county, comprises over 360 acres of thickly wooded canyons with running water the year around.

The new owner plans extensive improvements. The canyon will be surveyed, and hundreds of building sites under the big oaks will be sold or leased.

In addition to these, a large pavilion and a dance hall will be erected on the mesa at the entrance to the canyon.

Palmer Canyon is three miles above the Foothill Boulevard at Claremont, and a paved road runs to the mouth of the canyon. Half way between the Foothill Boulevard and the canyon the autoist passes the orchard of Judge J. Perry Wood, said to be one of the finest young groves in the citrus belt.

SHOE STORE OPENS HERE.

Joseph Greenberg has taken a two-year lease, with privilege of extension, on the store at 411 West Eighth street, where he will install a shoe store to handle the Tru-Pedic shoes. These shoes are manufactured under the auspices of the American Posture League, an organization composed of physicians and educators. Mr. Greenberg will open a second store for the sale of these shoes in San Francisco.

NEW TRACT OFFICE IS COMPLETED

Sixty Families Per Month Are Moving to Maywood, Officials Claim.

The Laguna Land and Water Company, subdividers of Maywood, has moved into its new tract headquarters at the corner of Slauson Cudahy avenues. The building, recently completed, also is occupied by a modern drug store and a grocery and meat market, while the upper floor is devoted to offices. The property is located at the center of the 2700-acre tract, which is being marketed by the company, and it is planned to develop a community business center in this vicinity.

At the present time sixty families a month are moving into new homes in this thriving suburban community, and the growing demand indicates that this record will be greatly increased during the winter months, according to officials of the company. The new Maywood school, to which a $50,000 addition has been completed, is employing eleven teachers at the present time, and an increase in its staff is contemplated.

The construction department of the Maywood Company is planning to increase its force to a point where two houses can be completed, ready to deliver to the purchasers, each day. It is estimated that this will enable the company to partially satisfy the demands of homeseekers among the Maywood garden homes.

Arrangements have been made to keep the city offices of the Maywood Company, located at 419 West Sixth street, open each evening until 8 o'clock.

FOREIGN TRADE PECULIARITIES.

England Buys Our Fruits for Re-export.

Has Also Captured Oriental Silk Imports.

Try to Cancel Canal Passenger Discriminations.

The return to his desk as the manager of the foreign trade extension department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, of Clarence Matson, after a month's absence because of illness, is the occasion for considerable news of value to exporters and importers, of which the following items lead in interest for the present week:

COMMERCE MAGAZINE.

Secretary Hoover is making a number of changes in the Department of Commerce, making the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of greater utility to the American business man.

For instance, Commerce Reports, formerly published as a little daily bulletin, but in which no attempt was made to classify the information, has been changed to a weekly magazine about the size of the Literary Digest. The information in it is now classified by industries or commodities, there are cable reports each week on conditions in foreign countries, and the foreign trade information likewise is better edited.

This magazine is published by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for the benefit of American business, particularly to build up American foreign trade. The government charges a subscription price of $3 a year for it, to cover cost of publication. Subscriptions may be made through the trade extension department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, which is a co-operative office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

DETAIL REPORTS.

Another new feature just introduced by the bureau is the issuance of multigraphed monthly statements in detail showing the exports and imports of various commodities. For instance, the statements for August have just been received by the Chamber of Commerce. One sheet shows the exports of canned goods to each country in the world, and peaches, pears and pineapples are each listed separately. Other fruits are grouped together. This list shows exactly what foreign markets are taking this commodity each month.

Another list shows the imports of tea, what countries it comes from, and the ports or customs districts through which it comes. Thus far such statements have been issued for about eighty different commodities of export, and about thirty-five different commodities of import.

In order to make this valuable information available to importers and exporters, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, offers to send it to firms applying through the trade extension department of the Chamber of Commerce for the particular statements in which they are interested.

RESELL OUR FRUITS.

Some peculiar deductions may be drawn from the statement of canned fruit exports in Anugust. It appears that England is buying the great bulk of our canned fruits. For instance, of a total of $559,112 worth of canned peaches exported in August, England took $506,862 worth. Of $295,225 worth of pears, England took $265,944 worth. We exported $517,639 worth of canned pineapples, and England bought $307,998 worth of them. Of all other canned fruits, there were $818,205 exported in August, of which England took $732,755 worth. Therefore England is buying more than 80 per cent of our exports of canned fruit, which amounted to more than $2,000,000 in August.

The deduction must be that English merchants are buying our fruits for re-export to other countries, and that American exporters might build a larger business in direct exports.

Before the war Germany did this same thing. There was a time when German merchants bought canned goods in California, put German labels on them, and resold them on the west coast of Mexico, right at our very doors.

BRITISH CAPTURE SILK.

Another astonishing situation is revealed by the August statement of raw silk imports. In 1920 more than $133,000,000 worth of raw silk came in from the Orient through Seattle. But in August not a pound of raw silk—except waste—was entered through either Seattle or San Francisco, but $11,807,191 worth came into the United States through the St. Lawrence customs district in Northern New York. The deduction is that this silk is being landed by Canadian Pacific vessels at Vancouver and is being hauled by the Canadian Pacific across Canada and shipped into the United States through some little town in Northern New York.

In other words, British shipping interests have captured the transportation of our silk, the most valuable item of all our oriental imports.

FRUITS TO CUBA.

A recent letter from the American Consul at Nuevitas, Cuba, acknowledging receipt of a copy of the Manufacturer's Directory issued by the Chamber of Commerce, says: "Preserved and dried fruits are widely used all over Cuba; and no inconsiderable quantity of fresh fruits, especially grapes, from your State are to be found in the larger cities of this island. Locally through this consular district of mine, these goods are invariably purchased from the large importers of Havana.

"From time to time steamships touch here that have made stops at your port; these usually, though, being carriers of lumber from Puget Sound, as considerable lumber is utilized at this port. Many of these vessels have, however, general cargo from Los Angeles that is destined to ports beyond, like Santo Domingo, Porto Rico, and South America."

RUSSIAN TRADE.

Information comes from the Russian consulate at San Francisco that the Commercial Address Bureau at Vladivostok, "has organized a foreign department for the purpose of registering all offers on the foreign market. They have also established a sample department, showing merchandise offered for sale, so that the Russian buyers may place their offers in Vladivostok as per samples exhibited.

"This firm offers its services to American exporters interested in the proposition at the nominal price of 10 cents per month for each article. The correspondent continues to explain that their exhibiting office is always visited by many people who examine the samples and catalogues on display there.

"Furthermore, he states that they have electrical advertising signs in Russian, English, Japanese and Chinese.

"Those who are interested in the propositions set forth above should communicate directly with A. Karmilov, Commercial Address Bureau, Svetlanskaya, 53, Apartment 5, Vladivostok, Siberia."

EUCALYPTUS PAPER.

The Eucalyptus Hardwood Association of California is investigating the making of paper from eucalyptus wood in Australia. The trade extension department of the Chamber of Commerce recently sent the Smith-Emery Company a report received from Australia by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce on this subject. The Smith-Emery Company is investigation it for the eucalyptus growers, and that firm says:

"From information we have, there is enough eucalyptus wood in one grove in this State to supply a paper mill continuously, cutting about one-eighth or one-tenth of the grove annually. This would allow time for the growth to reproduce itself so that it could be cut in cycles. The grove referred to is in San Luis Obispo county."

CANAL EMPLOYEES.

The Chamber of Commerce has taken up with the various steamship lines operating passenger service between the Panama Canal and Los Angeles the question of granting cheap rates to canal employees from Balboa to Pacific Coast ports. This subject has brought several letters from canal employees to the Chamber of Commerce, in which it is pointed out that they would like to come to Los Angeles for their vacations, but the fare is from $140 up, while they can go to New York for about $30.

One of these letters was sent by the Chamber of Commerce to the Matson Navigation Company, and W. P. Roth, vice-president and general manager of the company, replies as follows:

"As you are aware, we are operating Shipping Board vessels in this trade, and they have declined so far to give us permission to grant special rates to Panama Canal employees. It was pointed out to us that the matter of passenger rate concessions on government ships would open up such a large question that they considered it inadvisable to grant reduced fares to any persons whatsoever.

"We will be more than pleased to again take this subject up with them and submit the arguments advanced in Mr. Fisher's letter for their consideration. Our passenger department is arranging to do this at once, and I trust that some result will be achieved in this respect. You may count upon our fullest co-operation."

ACTIVITY SHOWN BY BIG FIGURES.

Estimate 11,000 Building Jobs Now Under Way in Los Angeles.

There are now 11,000 buildings of various types under construction in Los Angeles and vicinity, according to figures compiled by the local chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America. These jobs include all types of buildings, from the skyscraper in the downtown section, to the modest suburban bungalow.

Permits for the year now exceed $60,000,000, or more than the total for all of 1920. At this rate, the organization estimated permits to the value of more than $75,000,000 for the entire year. Permits to the number of 27,444 have been issued by the building department, or 2000 more than for the same period of last year.

BROKERS OF SOUTHWEST ORGANIZE.

Community Realty Board Formed; To Incorporate Under State Laws.

Realty dealers of the southwestern portion of the city, in the district lying south of Santa Barbara avenue and west of Main street, have formed an organization which will be known as the Southwest Realty Board. The membership, now comprising about thirty-five brokers, is limited to 100, and it is planned to enroll the principal licensed dealers in that section of the city.

The organization, according to its officials, has been formed in order to elevate the ideals and selling methods of the profession, and to facilitate the transfer of real estate within the district. Central offices of the organization will be established, and a listing exchange, such as is conducted by many of the large Eastern realty boards, will be inaugurated. Through this listing exchange, property which any member wishes to sell will be posted, on the bulletin boards of the organization so that other members can submit the property in question to their clients. It is also proposed to work for the beautification and the improvement of the entire district.

At a meeting last week, officers and directors were elected. B. M. Moore was made president, H. C. Vose, vice-president, W. P. Thompson, treasurer, and J. P. Cross, secretary. These officers, together with J. L. DuQuesney, also compose the board of directors. The organization will be incorporated under the laws of California.

ARCHITECT'S OFFICES.

Architect Arthur R. Kelly is preparing plans for a two-story English style store and office building to be erected on Hollywood Boulevard, between El Cerrito and Sycamore streets for himself. The entire second floor will be occupied by Mr. Kelly's architectural offices, while a part of the first floor will be used for his reception rom.

CONCRETE WAREHOUSE.

John M. Cooper, architect, has prepared plans and holds the contract for the erection of a two-story reinforced concrete addition to a warehouse at Ninth street, near Alameda, for R. H. Arnold. The building will be 120x120 feet.

DAILY TRADE TALK.

Los Angeles Near Top in Muuncipal Expenditure; New Bank Clearing Peak; Week in Review.

BY CHAPIN HALL.

Los Angeles is fourth from the top in per capita municipal expenditures in cities having more than 500,000 population, according to a cost of government chart prepared by the National Security League. Boston is the most extravagant city in the country with a per capita of $35.06; Pittsburg is second with $29.81; New York is third with 28.84, and Los Angeles is fourth with $26.62. Then follow in order, Philadelphia, $24.55; St. Louis, $23.37; Chicago, $22.52; Detroit, $21.13; Cleveland, $20.96, and Baltimore, $15.96.

In the cities having more than 1,000,000 population New York leads, with Philadelphia second, and Chicago third. In the group of four cities with population between 700,000 and 1,000,000 Boston leads, followed by St. Louis, Detroit and Cleveland. Pittsburg has the highest rate of the three cities with population between 500,000 and 700,000, with Los Angeles second, and Baltimore third.

Los Angeles leads in her per capita expenditure for schools with $10.88, which is $1.77 in excess of Boston, her nearest competitor, and compares with a per capita of $3.74 by Baltimore at the foot of the list.

This city only spends $1.94 per head for police protection, but at that leads Baltimore and Cleveland. For fire protection it is fourth on the list with $1.87, being topped by the same cities which lead it in gross per capita expenditure, i.e., Boston, Pittsburg and New York. Los Angeles is seventh on the list in health protection with a per capita of 57 cents.

Federal disbursements average over $250 annually for each American family, and this sum is practically doubled by State and municipal taxation. Years ago Senator Aldrich stated that if expenditures of government were administered on a business basis every dollar expended could be reduced to 70 cents, and it is the opinion of many financiers that this condition still exists.

So long as city, State and national affairs are conducted upon a political rather than a business basis no relief is to be expected, other than sporadic attempts in an occasional department, and until we learn the fallacy of hiring for our business managers the men who can get the most votes regardless of their adaptability for the job in hand, and then discharge them every two or four years to try other men and other methods, extravagance will go hand in hand with government.

Charles D. Orth, president of the league, sums it up in this wise:

"But nothing can be accomplished for the public benefit unless the people will arouse from their present stupor and take a proper active interest in their civic affairs.

"One of the many unhappy aftermaths of the war has been the letdown in public interest in civic affairs. The average citizen seems to believe that he is performing his duty by criticising and objecting in his private conversations to the abuses and shortcomings which exist at the present time, but, when it comes to taking any definite action, the 'let George do it' spirit prevails. This is not the spirit upon which was based the progress and development of the American nation."

WEEK IN REVIEW.

The week was interesting chiefly for the injection into the business horoscope of a possible railroad strike, which, in the event of successful accomplishment will undoubtedly have a seriously disturbing effect upon all branches of industrial, commercial and financial activity.

However, the public has declined to become greatly overwrought at the impending prospect, which most people believe will either fail to eventuate or will come to an early demise for lack of nourishment. There has not been an advertised-in-advance strike within the history of organized labor with so little public support, and without such support there can be but one result.

The local retail trade was again affected by a series of hot days, but this buying was only deferred and came out in force the last of the week when the wave had passed. Volume for October is holding up well, and a gross increase is likely to be established over the preceding month or over the corresponding month a year ago.

At large, a note of discouragement, or perhaps impatience, has crept into the reports. Some of this may be due to the strike unsettlement, but it is likely that more is because of the tax revision delay, and the growing probability that some of the changes anticipated, notably in a radical reduction of income surtaxes and the repeal of the capital stock tax and the excess profits tax, may not be made at all. This feeling also had its effect in the Liberty Bond market which has reacted during the week, and which probably had an effect in softening the balance of the market.

There has been little improvement in our export business which remains stagnant, and until our goods begin to move overseas protected by a stabilized system of financing the brakes will be set against marked revival in many lines. The bond market has been quiet, but the position of the long term issues remains strong, and when crop financing is completed and other temporary setbacks discounted the investment market will be active. It is, in fact, better in Los Angeles, than elsewhere at the present time.

There is much of encouragement in the oil situation which is summarized by Henry L. Doherty & Co:

"As a result of further increases of market prices for every important grade of crude oil except California in the United States within the last week, the general outlook for the petroleum industry is yet more favorable. A general falling off of the production of some of the most prolific fields in Mexico, combined with the restriction of drilling in the United States have been the principal factors in bringing these changes about. The entrance of salt water in many of the larger producing Mexican wells has for the time being removed the fear of a superabundance of imports from that country.

"Drilling in the United States has been restricted and all new work avoided as far as possible ever since the first declines in oil prices last winter. In the past few weeks, with few exceptions, the daily average production has shown a net decline and for the month of September the total falling off in daily average production amounted to 146,470 barrels, total, of which 103,000 apples to California. The decline in California crude has been largely due to strike conditions. A drop in the number of rigs and drilling wells has been constant ever since the first declines in crude-oil prices last January.

"At the present time only about 120 days' supply of oil is in storage in the United States. Stocks of crude oil held by refiners at this time totals little more than 20,000,000 barrels, out of a total of 160,000,000 barrels, while finished products amount to 75,000,000 barrels against a high of 82,000,000 barrels. This decline, combined with higher crude-oil prices, indicates that refiners are now drawing on crude oil held by pipeline and marketing companies."

FINANCING ARIZONA COTTON.

That the action of Los Angeles banks in advancing the necessary funds on last year's cotton crop in the Salt River Valley saved millions of dollars to Arizona growers and has made possible the orderly marketing of last year's crop in preventing forced sales at ruinous prices, was the statement made yesterday by J. Dabney Day, vice-president of the First National Bank of Los Angeles, and chairman of the Cotton Committee of the Los Angeles Clearinghouse Association, on his return from Phoenix.

Mr. Day, who has been in Arizona for some days making arrangements for continuing support of the Arizona growers by Los Angeles banks, outlining the methods by which this support will be given, said:

"The Maricopa County Credit Association has been formed with a capital of $100,000 to act as a sort of middleman for the Arizona growers and to provide additional machinery for handling the cotton. The $100,000 stock of this association has been subscribed by the banks of the Salt River Valley. With this machinery set up, a $1,000,000 credit has been promised by Los Angeles banks to finance the movement of the new cotton crop, in addition to the credits given on the old crop. The price of cotton has materially advanced, and the carrying of the old crop by Los Angeles banks, at a time when it was impossible to secure financial assistance else-

BUSINESS NEWS.

Strike Talk Slows Down Cotton Market; New Financing; Municipal Offerings Include Harbor Issue.

Prospects of a railroad strike caused a general stagnation in the cotton market last week. Mills refused to buy beyond their barest necessities on account of their fear that a strike might catch them with a surplus of finished products on hand and no shipping facilities to move their goods to market. This uncertainty concerning the future movement of the crop and finished goods caused an average decline of 1 cent a pound during the week.

The ready demand that California-grown cotton is meeting with at present is no criterion of the future condition of the cotton market, say Los Angeles cotton brokers. Too little of the commodity in this State has been ginned and brought to market to determine what the trend of prices will be when the buying season gets under full sway. An average of a little more than 18 cents a pound was paid in the interior last week for middling cotton. A general decline in basis was reported everywhere in the cotton belt.

The boom in American Egyptian cotton that attracted some attention about ten days ago has gradually subsided. This variety is now selling at 2 to 3 cents lower than its high level at the peak of the recent boom. Fluctuations in Egyptian never run within moderate limits and the violence of the latest flurry is only characteristic of this sporty staple.

C. C. Selden, of the Edward Fowler Company, reports that Liverpool is still the best source of the demand for California cotton and that the taking of eastern mills remains about the same. Local brokers filled somewhat heavier orders than they did in the previous week.

Considerable attention is being paid in the cotton world to the forthcoming report of the Bureau of Crop Estimates and the Census Bureau on condition and ginning, which will appear next Tuesday. This will be the final estimate of the Department of Agriculture concerning the condition of this year's crop and will cover the period ended October 18. From the total estimated crops and the ginned cotton it will be possible to estimate the unginned crop.

The season's ginning has progressed further at this time than it has in any other year in recent cotton history. The short crop and the unusually fine weather have been responsible. It is expected that Tuesday's report will show a total of nearly 5,350,000 bales ginned out of a total crop of around 6,750,000 bales.

PUBLIC BOND SALES.

An issue of $1,600,000 Los Angeles Harbor improvement bonds will be sold to the highest bidder at a public bond sale Wednesday. Additional financing will be consummated by the city when $1,015,000 Los Angeles City High School district 5½ per cent bonds and $2,000,000 Los Angeles city school district bonds, also bearing 5½ per cent, are sold on October 31.

The principal interest of bond-buying circles this week, is centered on the $5,000,000 issue of California State highway bonds, which are to be sold on October 27. These bonds bear 5¾ per cent interest.

According to records available at the offices of R. H. Moulton & Co., other forthcoming municipal financing includes issues of $80,000 Courtland Union High School, Sacramento county, 6 per cent bonds on October 26; $11,000 Roosevelt school district, Fresno county, 6 per cent bonds, on October 28, and $109,000 Willows school district, Glenn county, 6 per cent bonds on October 27.

PERMANENT BONDS.

Merrill, Lynch & Co. report that definitive bonds of two recent issues are ready for delivery at the offices of the Central Union Trust Company, No. 80 Broadway, New York. Foreign Government Securities

The investor is offered in the Two-year 7% Treasury Gold Notes of the Argentine Nation a direct obligation of one of the most progressive countries in South America. Argentina is one of the richest nations per capita, and ranks among the great producing countries. Due to the real character of her civilization, the wealth of her natural resources, the stability and excellent financial record of the government, and the possibilities of her vast and almost undeveloped territory, she enjoys a very high rank among nations of the world.

Argentina for some years has shown a very heavy excess of exports over imports. The national funded debt, both external and internal, on December 31, 1920, was approximately $533,000,000, equal to about $63 per capita. Recent published figures show a total of approximately $463,000,000 gold held against notes in circulattion, representing a ratio of about 80% and indicating that their currency is one of the soundest in the world. We offer the above notes at 99⅝ and interest to yield over 7.20%.

The tremendous building activity of "Greater Southern California—Straight Ahead" is requiring enormous sums of capital for development purposes.

Golden State Construction Co.

has completed sixty-two contracts within a period of six months and has many others under way and pending. Proportionate to its capital this building and construction organization has achieved one of the business romances of Los Angeles.

And now GOLDEN STATE has signed, with Pittsburgh capitalists, a contract to erect buildings in California, Utah, Colorado and Nevada, which, with installed machinery, will involve a total cost of and the cost of the buildings alone will much exceed $1,000,000. This contract is on a "cost-plus" basis, with payments accruing every thirty days.

To handle this large contract and others under way, the Commissioner of Corporations has authorized the issuance to the public of sufficient shares of this company's stock, to finance this construction program. Shares are offered at par, $1.00. Capitalization, $250,000.

"The Story of Hartman," the founder and general manager of this corporation, is a story of interest. You are urged, if a conservative investor, to secure the full data at the company's general offices. Stock to be withdrawn with the sale of this limited issue.

8 Per Cent Plus, Good Dividends and Safety, For You

An 8% stock, with interest guaranteed for five years, during which time additional dividends seem assured; with guaranty of repurchase in five years if holder desires; is offered you in units of $500 to $20,000.

This is in a going concern, doing a profitable business on a large scale for several years, and is now on the eve of declaring its first dividends.

For betterments and improvements and retiring maturing obligations, this Company offers a limited amount of its capital stock. It is offered on a guaranty of 8% annual interest for five years, at which period the controlling stockholders guarantee to repurchase it if the holder is willing to part with it.

The officers and directors are Californians of long standing; and the business, which is only one of numerous interests, has been developed to established success, with dividend earnings already accrued. These earnings indicate rapid further increase.

Convincing evidence that their guaranty is good is available, through Los Angeles and San Francisco banks and large industrial concerns that buy the product, orders on hand, and their record of successful management.

The industry is basic and is essential to Los Angeles industrial expansion, by which expansion this business will also increase, so that larger dividends seem reasonably assured.

Investments of $500 to $20,000 are preferred, rather than encouragement of large holdings by big capitalists, and investors of such amounts are invited to investigate.

If you are interested in such a safe investment, carrying with it the prospect of largely increased value by the expansion of the business, you can deal directly with the officials and none of your investment will be paid in brokers' commissions, but all will go directly into the enterprise. For particulars, it will be well to

ORANGES.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 22.—Too liberal supplies of Valencias in eastern markets, together with heavy competition, from new-crop apples is responsible for an easier market on Valencias.

Shipments continue to average around ninety carloads daily and would have run considerably higher, had not the shortage of refrigerator cars interfered with the determination of some growers to rush their fruit out before the threatened railroad strike. The shortage of cars at this particular time is a "blessing in disguise," as far as citrus shippers are concerned. The markets will absorb a certain supply of Valencias but an oversupply would spell disaster in the face of increasing supplies of new-crop Florida oranges in the markets.

There are in the neighborhood of 1200 cars of Valencias remaining for shipment and it is the aim of shippers to try and spread the movement of these between now and November 10.

F.o.b. quotations are on the basis of $5 to $5.50 per box.

NEW CROP.

Reports from Central and Northern California citrus districts state that unseasonable hot weather has prevailed day and night and as a result, navels are not coloring up as they should. Cool nights are needed to bring out the color.

A few cars of navels may go forward between November 5 and 10, but the outlook at this time is for an exceptionally light supply of navels for Thanksgiving.

Cash buyers are paying 2½ cents per pound for navels in Tulare county. The threatened railroad strike, however, is a big factor in the situation and both growers and buyers are now more or less in the air as a result.

It is yet too early for anything definite on opening prices for navels.

Shipments of Florida oranges total less than 100 cars to date. Latest reports state that the prospects are that a larger percentage of Florida oranges will be lost this year from splitting and dropping owing to dry weather.

LEMONS.

The market on lemons continues steady.

F.o.b. quotations are on a basis of $4 per box for 300s size and $4.50 for 300s.

There are 26,000 boxes of foreign lemons on hand and available for sale within the next thirty days.

The average supply at this time for past five years was 23,000 boxes foreign lemons.

The prospects are for lighter supplies of foreign lemons from now on. The last cargo sold this week brought an average of $2.20 per box. The cost of laying a box down in New York, with the new tariff added, figures around $4 and should have some bearing on imports.

NORTHWEST APPLES.

SPOKANE (Wash.) Oct. 20.—Washington holds first place in the United States in 1921 in apple production. The tonnage on September -, as estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture, 6,548,000 barrels of commercial apples, is nearly double that of the nearest producer, New York, which is credited with 3,707,000 barrels. All government estimates are given in barrels. There are approximately three northwestern boxes in an eastern barrel.

Washington in 1921 will produce about one-third of the apples in the United States. The estimate for the nation is 19,500,000 barrels.

The Pacific Northwest, which includes Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, with 8,485,000 barrels, or 25,455,000 boxes, has about 43 per cent of the nation's commercial apples. The government figures put the northwestern crop this year at 28,000 cars, the record for the industry. The 1920 figure, according to the same authority, was 24,900 cars.

NEW PEAK NEAR FOR CLEARINGS.

where, has saved millions to the Arizona growers.

"It is understood that there will be no new cotton pool formed among the Los Angeles banks, but the credits to be advanced in connection with the new crop movement will be handled by the individual banks direct through their individual correspondents in Arizona, the intention being to aid the cotton grower to carry his crop and to prevent a forced dumping upon the market with the consequent ruinous prices."

BANK CLEARINGS GROW.

Bank clearings in Los Angeles for the week totaled $89,709,368.65, an increase of $4,184,489.11 over the corresponding period in 1920. This gain is consistent with the constantly expanding business which has been a part of the year's development in this city, and is said by bankers to be without especial significance except in so far as it bears out the fiscal reports from practically every trade division.

BIG MERGER NEARS.

Negotiations are said to be proceeding in the merger plans of the Union Oil Company of Delaware and the Royal Dutch Shell Company and a definite announcement is looked for at an early date. The latest move has been the retirement from the directorate of the Delaware Union of W. L. Stewart, president of the Union Oil of California, and John S. Drumm, former president of the American Bankers' Association. W. J. Broder and M. J. Beaty of New York, heavily interested in the Delaware corporation, have also retired. Delaware Union stock continues to be active around $20. A story which came out of the East to the effect that the California company might be involved in the Royal Dutch deal is given emphatic denial, strengthened by the retirement of interlocking directors.

AMERICA WORLD'S BANKER.

Ran across a sentiment enunciated by Comptroller of the Currency Crissinger to a group of bankers during the convention, which is worth passing on:

"Our banks of all classes," said the Comptroller, "posses resources and responsibilities aggregating more than all the rest of the banking resources of the world.

"For generations Britain was the gold headquarters of the world, the one assured free market for the standardizing metal. Why did she hold that place? Because she was too wise to be a miser, a mere hoarder. She knew that a good repute was worth more than tons of the yellow stuff. She held herself as trustee, on behalf of the commercial world, for all the gold that came to her. She let it go as freely as she let it come. She made her the one universal free market for gold; and in doing so she made herself the financial capital of all creation.

Low Prices on All Grains in Wheat Market.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 22.—Lower prices were made for all grains with the close around the inside at losses of 1⅝@2¼ cents, December leading. Corn ⅝ to ⅞ cent lower, oats ½ cent and rye 1¼ to 2 cents lower than the previous day. The buying power, which gave evidence of increasing on Friday, was not existent to any extent during the day, the main support on the decline coming from profit-takers. News was favorable for a break, particularly from abroad, and especially from Argentine.

Wheat was under pressure from local interests as well as hedgers, and a majority of the news favored lower prices. Argentine news was particularly depressing. Crop prospects there are favorable and prices are said to have declined 12½ cents in the last two days, although Argentine wheat is selling at equal to $1.28 at continent, as compared with $1.24 for American hard winter at the gulf.

Prices were highest at the start and nearly the same as the previous day's close, with a break toward the last of 2¼ cents, the low point being $1.05¾ for the December and $1.10¼ for May, with the finish ¼ to ⅛ cent above the low point.

There is a feeling that corn and oats should do better, but speculative trade is light and the depression in wheat tends to curtail new buying. Word has been sent to country shippers of coarse grains not to put grain in transit, which might deteriorate in quality should there be delay in unloading as the result of a railroad strike. This is expected to curtail the movement.

There is little hedging pressure and local selling made the prices off ⅝ to ⅞ cent on corn and ⅜ cent on oats, with the close on May corn 51⅞ and oats 37¼ cents. Bids on new corn in Central Illinois were reduced 3 cents late in the day and twenty-five cars of new received here for the day.

COTTON MARKET HAS STEADIER UNDERTONE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Displaying a somewhat steadier undertone, due entirely to a number of Wall-street shorts covering over the weekend, the cotton market in today's brief session was a rather quiet affair. Over Sunday so many changes in the railroad situation are possible that investors considered it wise to liquidate accounted for the small amount of trading. Prices sold off about 1 to 6 points at the outset, but rallied later with buying for trade and commission-house account.

Before the end of the first hour the market advanced about 10 to 18 points over last night's final bids, but was unable to hold its gain in face of scattered selling by Japanese interests and a little "long" liquidation. Bulls were helped by the strength of securities and the constructive character of week-end statistics.

The market was steady and dull early in the second hour, with prices about on a level with the preceding close. Final bids were 5 to 18 points net lower.

TEXAN

Waits For No Man's Money

She Drills!

Three wells drilling as fast as human hands and modern machinery can drive

Well No. 1 past the 2600 mark!

Well No. 2 flying to reach 1000.

Well No. 3 away to a swift start with the same record-breaking drill Rockwell—who drilled Optimo with lightning speed—at the wheel.

Texan units are selling fast—but no faster than Texan's drills are digging.

The Fosters have pledged the money and the wells will be finished no matter sales may be.

Isn't that the kind of an oil proposition that appeals to you? One that is plainly fair a red-blooded man's chance at big money with an even break for everybody also, that waits for nothing, but goes right after the oil. And when oil pours out, actually divides the oil—among everybody who holds an interest.

No illusive, far-in-the-future stock proposition. No glowing promises with nothing them up. On the contrary, three wells actually being drilled on 100 acres of the choicest leases in the choicest oil field in all the world—Breckenridge, Stephens County, Texas!

And units which represent actual ownership in every barrel of oil received by the every well it may drill. And that should easily mean ten—for there are 100 acres

The chance you take is the smallest you ever took in your life in an investment. There is a well now producing 700 barrels per day only 660 feet from TEXAN Well No. 1, and a hundred other big producers in the same area—the strongest kind of proof that TEXAN lies over the marvelous oil deposits that have made Breckenridge famous.

You like speed in getting results. Now, show some for your own good! Texan units are selling at $25 each. But that price isn't guaranteed against a raise. It may go up over night. The man who gets his money down without delay is the only man who is SURE he will share the riches which TEXAN may be depended upon to yield.

Our warning to hurry is earnest and sincere. In the few days before the books closed, Optimo units advanced by leaps and bounds. TEXAN WILL DO THE SAME!

We want you to know all about TEXAN, and the attached coupon, sent to us, will bring it as fast as the mails can function.

But that's a little slow. To get action that is really prompt and safe, telephone Pico 4341, or better still, come to our office, 603 Pacific Finance Building, and ask for our sales manager.

We'll be glad to have you come to us, or we'll gladly go to you. The main thing is to ACT AT ONCE!

FOR SALE—
WEST WASHINGTON FRONTAGE!

Corner of Wilton and Washington street, 140 feet on Washington unrestricted, and the best corner left in the district. This property you can buy for $25,000 or a trifle over $175 foot for corner. Inside lots bringing more, and many inside lots at double the price in the same district.

Now, here is something of what Washington is doing now, and has done past sixty days. South corner Washington and Western, five stores just completed sixty days ago. Opposite corner now being built seven new brick stores. One block west there is being built four new brick white tile store buildings. One block west of there is seven new brick store buildings just being completed, next block west there is four new brick store buildings completed about six weeks ago, and six others to begin erection next fifteen days. Next corner west is this beautiful corner at $25,000, for 140 feet frontage Washington. Two blocks west is Arlington, and the North corner of Arlington and Washington a two-story building to be erected at once. Joining this property is a new 900 seats Theater to be built at once, and work on the building will start Monday. One-half block from this property is five new store buildings completed sixty days ago, and immediately opposite there is three new brick buildings just completed. One block west of there is five new brick buildings being erected now, and across the street from these is Ralph's big new brick store, which is the largest store they have outside of the main store on Vermont. Two blocks west of these there is being built now three new brick stores, and one-half block from these a two-story building will begin erection next fifteen days. One block west of there you will see under construction next fifteen days three new beautiful brick stores, and just across the street on the corner of Seventh another beautiful Theater is to be built and work begun in fifteen days.

Many other beautiful structures to be built on Washington west of Western, and more than a dozen others on Washington now being built farther west on Washington a few blocks. We have just mentioned the developments on West Washington within a very few blocks.

The newspapers don't give us any mention of this wonderful development, and there is not a district in Los Angeles doing bigger things than Washington west of Western. All this wonderful development has been accomplished with natural resources and brainy men and women who know this district, and know its wonderful future. If we had had one-fourth the publicity West Washington deserved from the papers, we would be doing four times the improvements, and the entire city would marvel at our progress. No better opportunities ever offered in Los Angeles for quick and handsome profits as the frontage on Washington west of Western to city limits.

We are headquarters for this frontage and have a big list to select from. Many corners and inside lots at prices where you can make 50 per cent next few months, and in fact, very few months.

To prove our good faith in this 140 feet of Washington corner, to any person who buys it now at the price of $25,000 we will give in cash, one thousand dollars for a ninety days' option at a price of $35,000 net to the buyer. In other words, we will pay $1000 for the privilege of making you ten thousand dollars in ninety days. If we had the money to buy it, it would not be for sale at any price like that.

Cor. Third ave. and Washington. West 3491.

A LAND SUBDIVISION.

Here is an opportunity to purchase 3500 acres of fine level land, situated between the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Rys., with plenty of water at 20 ft., for only $50 per acre and on easy terms.

This is a genuine subdivision proposition which will make a handsome profit for those who undertake to develop the property and resell in parcels.

The land should be planted to Malaga, Muscat, Thompson's Seedless and other grapes; also alfalfa and fruit trees and resold in parcels to actual settlers.

We can show you conclusively that there is a net profit in this transaction of over $100 per acre, or about $350,000, and with comparatively small amount of actual cash invested.

VALENCIA

ORANGE

GROVES.

20 acres (1744 trees) which unquestionably stands unchallenged as the best orange grove in this section. A grove with a record, a grove with a future. There is not one weak feature attached to this offering. Upon inspection one becomes impressed with the size of the trees, their vigor, health and thrifty condition. The soil is of the finest, setting indicates that it will be one of the heaviest producing 20 acres in Orange county. This is a grove which has received not only the best of care, but all work has been done by the owners themselves. Its location is ideal, situated in city limits, 3 blocks from the new postoffice, with frontage on 3 streets. The only reason this splendid grove is on the market is due to one of the owners being desirous of returning east. It is offered for sale at a ridiculously low figure, and we are prepared to produce figures which will show an income of 22 per cent. This is your one big opportunity to purchase a grove which is daily increasing in value. Don't wait until the fruit colors up. Don't wait until the owners change their minds but buy now.

5 acres of 5-year old Valencias that would do your heart good to see. The trees have an exceptionally heavy setting for next year, with every indication of sizing up well. Soil conditions fine. This grove is all piped. There is a nice home, all modern, with garage, which makes the proposition exceptionally attractive. We doubt if there is another 5 acres which can compare with this. Anyone purchasing this beautiful grove will feel greatly satisfied especially when the fruit colors up. Better look into this before it is too late.

TAKING IN AN ENTIRE TOWN SITE AND TOWN.

Including a fine general merchandise store building; real estate offices with modern 9-room apartment connected; town water works; several fine houses; and several sets of improvements. Four hundred acres are checked, leveled and ditched; 300 acres are level as a floor; the balance is level and only requires a little finishing. The soil is rich and is wonderfully adapted for the best kind of vineyard. A neighbor was offered for his 20-acre vineyard, $1500 an acre. The largest almond, walnut and fig trees can be seen on neighboring property always loaded to the limit. The trees were planted from seeds and are the largest for their age that can be seen anywhere in the State. Our ranch is equipped with the finest irrigation system from which every acre can be irrigated at a very small cost. Wonderful drainage. One of the healthiest climates in San Joaquin Co. Water is 99 per cent pure. Electric lights; telephone; railroad station on property. Stock, implements, tools and machinery; everything ready for immediate occupancy and you can start right in to farm and also run a general merchandise, lumber yard, grain and hay and real estate business and make a great success.

Thousands of acres are available surrounding our property, which can also be subdivided and sold at a big profit. If this ranch will be planted to vineyard (cuttings for which can be secured from adjoining neighbors' ranches at a small cost) the cost of which will be small, this ranch could easily be sold in 10 and 20-acre tracts, and you would more than double your money.

This property cost us $250,000, but we will sacrifice and either sell, with reasonable payment down and best of terms for the balance, or we will exchange for property which will not take up too much of our time. We may also divide this ranch to suit any property you have to offer. We must sell as our entire time is taken up with our business interests in the city.

Here is your chance. Owners and brokers, don't hesitate to submit your proposition. Will pay full commission to brokers.

Yours for Business,
J. MEYER & SON,

OIL SHORTAGE IS INCREASING.

No better investment can be made now than test holes in new territory. The country needs all the oil you can find, and you have a safe and sure market.

Don't resort to old-fashioned methods of drilling, with large and expensive machinery. Never forget the cost of a hole increases in the approximate proportion to the "square of its diameter."

So drill small-diameter holes with the latest and most efficient portable machine ever built for territories from 800 to 2500 feet deep. Write for particulars and circulars.

BUSINESS INVESTMENTS—

8 PER CENT PLUS, GOOD DIVIDENDS AND SAFETY, FOR YOU.
And 8 per cent stock, with interest guaranteed for five years, during which time additional dividends seem assured; with guaranty of repurchase in five years if holder desires; is offered you in units of $500 to $20,000.

This is a going concern, doing a profitable business on a large scale for several years, and now on the eve of declaring its first dividends.

For betterments and improvements and retiring maturing obligations, this company offers a limited amount of its capital stock. It is offered on a guaranty of 8 per cent annual interest for five years, at which period the controlling stockholders guarantee to repurchase it if the holder is willing to part with it.

The officers and directors are Californians of long standing; and the business, which is only one of numerous interests, has been developed to established success, with dividend earnings already accrued. These earnings indicate rapid further increase.

Convincing evidence that their guaranty is good is available, through Los Angeles and San Francisco banks and large industrial concerns that buy the product, orders on hand, and their record of successful management.

The industry is basic and is essential to Los Angeles industrial expansion, by which expansion this business will also increase, so that larger dividends seem reasonably assured.

Investments of $500 to $20,000 are preferred, rather than encouragement of large holdings by big capitalists, and investors of such amounts are invited to investigate.

If you are interested in such a safe investment, carrying with it the prospect of largely increased value by the expansion of the business, you can deal directly with the officials and none of your investment will be paid in brokers' commissions, but all will go directly into the enterprise. For particulars, it will be well to Promptly Address—T, box 10,—TIMES OFFICE.

IF IT'S ADVERTISED BY US IT'S GOOD—
There is a certain class of people who will not place their business in the hands of a broker for sale, and there are also people who will not buy through a broker. If we were given an opportunity, we will venture to say that we could convince those people that they are wrong, but we have not the time or inclination to do so. Over our name in this issue you will find several high-class business openings that could not be obtained in any other way than through a broker, and we have been fortunate, inasmuch as we have been selected as a capable and reliable concern to present these to the prospective purchaser. We invite you to make a thorough investigation of today's offerings.

The Fall Months—Finest in the Whole Year for Touring in Southern California.

While motorists in the East are beginning to figure out some way of heating the family garage during the winter and are hatching up mixtures to keep their radiators from freezing, Southern California drivers are hitting the open road to mountains, beaches, canyons, and streams. And right now, of all times, perhaps, is the best to get away from town for a day or so and turn the motor's nose toward some of the famous scenic spots around Los Angeles. The sketch by Charles H. Owens of The Times' art staff gives an idea of the wide variety of motor jaunts not too far from the center of the city.

ROADS NOW EXCELLENT FOR TOURS.

Highways in General in Fine Shape; Few Detours Being Mended Rapidly.

General road conditions for motorists in California have just been reported by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

It is of interest to all auto owners to know that the coast route to San Francisco is minus the Santa Maria detour, construction work in this section having been completed. However there is a short detour of four and one-half miles at Coyote Station north of Gilroy.

There is also a short detour between Arroyo Grande and Santa Maria. The remainder of the route is now paved with the exception of the Gaviota Pass. This district, it

A BIG INCREASE IN REGISTRATION VALUES.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) Oct. 22.—A total of 9,245,195 passenger automobiles, trucks and commercial vehicles, 28,114 trailers and 177,234 motorcycles were registered in the forty-eight States and the District of Columbia during the first six month of the present year, according to the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture.

As a result of these registrations and the licensing of drivers, the States and district collect during that period a total gross revenue of $108,213,165. The figures show an increase of nearly $6,000,000 over the full year of 1920 when revenues totaled $102,546,212. "Of the 1920 registration revenues," says the bureau, $97,671,742, or 93 per cent was available for road work. Of the registration revenues collected during the first six months of the current year, $101,793,416 is available for road work, either by the State highway departments or local road officials."

The percentage of the gross during that period is 94, an apparent decrease of 1 per cent, but the increase seems more apparent than real because in some States the funds do not become available until the end of the year.

PAIGE CHIEF IS ON WAY TO WEST COAST.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 22.—Henry Krohn, vice-president, sales division, Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company, is on his way to the Pacific Coast to spend four weeks in the western territory. The selling season opens on the Coast about November 1, and Mr. Krohn will be on the ground to direct operations of dealers and distributors for the 1922 campaign.

On the strength of the increased business done this year, Paige has been allotted national show space in New York and Chicago, which places it higher among the leaders in its class than ever before.

REPUBLIC ENLARGES SERVICE FACILITIES.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ALMA (Mich.) Oct. 22.—Col. Frank E. Smith, first vice-president and general manager of the Republic Truck Sales Corporation of Alma, denies the rumor that the establishment of factory branches in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Chicago and Detroit foreshadows the replacing of the company's present system of distribution. The Republic Company, Col. Smith asserts is merely carrying out its policy of maintaining and, where necessary, enlarging its sales and service facilities for the benefit of Republic truck users in various parts of the country.

"NINE DOORS" TO DESERT.

Southern California's Unconsidered Heritage of Silence and Spaciousness Invites Motorists Now.

Beyond the wall of the Sierra Madres, the San Bernardinos, the Santa Rosas, and the Cuyamacas lies Southern California's unconsidered heritage, an heritage of silence and spaciousness, of unplowed earth and unstained sky. The mountain peaks that look seaward have seen the entire face of the country below them change, turn from sage brush to alfalfa or orchard or grain. Those that look east or north see little change or none in the face of the Mojave or the Colorado, save where the heart of the Imperial Valley has altered from dun to gren.

THE NINE DOORS.

Some day, certainly, more people will become acquainted with the Southern California deserts than know them now. During the summer months, of course, no one seeks the desert from choice, but October and November open the nine doors to the desert and offer the out-door lover, who is a motorist, a chance to explore a country whose charm to those who love it is infinitely stronger than that of the crowded beaches or the equally crowded mountain resorts of Southern California.

Twenty years ago it took time and more or less real hardship to become acquainted with even the fringes of the desert country. Today it is the easiest matter in the world to become well acquainted with much of the desert by means of the motor car, and the danger connected with such exploring would probably not begin to equal the risk attached to motoring over some of our more popular boulevards on a Sunday afternoon. As for the rewards connected with such exploring

MUST SHOW ALL LIGHTS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 22.—Charles J. Chenu, director of the State Motor Vehicle Department, has sent out instructions to all police departments, sheriffs, constables and other peace officers in California to rigidly enforce Section 13 of the Motor Vehicle Act, requiring lights at night on bicycle and horse-drawn vehicles.

Chenu calls to the attention of the guardians of the law the importance of this section of the act as a means of reducing many accidents that are occurring on the highways in various parts of the State. He urges strict enforcement of the law in every locality.

"In driving an automobile on the highways at night," said Chenu, "it is often extremely difficulty to discern a person riding a bicycle or horse-drawn exhicle if the bicycle or vehicle is not carrying a tail light.

"The disregard that is being shown for this important section of the law is resulting in many accidents, and we are going to see that this and all other sections of the law are strictly enforced."

PINK SHEET NEWS SUMMARY.

AUTOMOBILES. Eighty-six freight cars loaded with Overland and Willys-Knight automobiles now rushing from Toledo to Los Angeles. Railroad officials trying to establish new high mark for speedy delivery and expect to get huge train here in seven days. Claimed to be the largest and richest shipment of motor cars that have ever left Toledo at one time.

Auto Club gets out new set of safety signs for downtown streets. Changes in design and standard noticed in latest devices which go into position tomorrow.

Fall months are ideal time to pay a visit to Southern California's unconsidered heritage—the desert. Beauty and scenic wonders of vast stretches of sand now appealing to motorists.

Times-Franklin scout car discovers many points of interest to motor car drivers on trip through famous and romantic San Luis Obispo county.

State Motor Vehicle Department warns that all bicycles and horse-drawn vehicles must carry lights when on the highways at night. Many accidents have been reported recently traceable directly to lack of illumination on these two varieties of transportation.

Brief items of interest gathered in the motor car manufacturing centers of the East and received over The Times leased wires.

Latest happenings in the field of aviation both in this country and abroad.

MILTON IS HOT AFTER R. SARLES.

Two Motor Go-Fasts Ought to Stage Terrible Battle at Beverly Thanksgiving.

Far above the cry of who will triumph in the 250-mile Thansgiving Day speed classic at the Beverly Speedway arises the "I will and won't" battle between Roscoe Sarles and Tommy Milton, leader and runner up in the national championship percentage table.

There may be many foreign pilots of great European racing cars and there may be many new faces to greet the spectators when the daredevils of the modern cars of Juggernaut go to the starting line on Turkey Day, but the real battle, backed by a bitterness of feeling seldom paralleled in the realm of sports, will be waged by two great drivers, Tommy Milton, world's speed king,' and Roscoe Sarles, Nemesis of the champion.

There may be amazing DePalmas, popular Jimmy Murphys, Come-back Earl Coopers, and sensational Joe Thomas', in the coming speedfest at Beverly, but the battle which will be supreme in the minds of the spectators will be that waged between Tommy Milton and Roscoe Sarles. Both drivers may finish far in the rear of the winner, in the ruck of the other contestants, but to each of them the question will be, did I lick my sworn enemy of the speed courses?

ESSEX ANNOUNCES PRICE REDUCTION.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Oct. 22.—New prices just announced by the Essex Motors mark an extreme reduction of $600 on the open models since September, 1920, and a reduction of $250 below prices quoted last June.

The new prices, the company announces, reflect the advantages taxen of the present and anticipated market conditions for the next year. On open models the present price is $150 lower than the Essex ever sold for. Reductions of as much as $705 occur on some of the closed models.

The new prices, officials of the company point out, apply to a new and improved Essex car in which the advantages of former models have been retained and supplemented by refinements that make for smoothness of operation, freedom from service attention, and reliability.

NO LOAFING NOTICED IN TIRE WORLD

Believe Balance Sheets Will Show a Gain Over Last Year's Production.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

AKRON (O.) Oct. 22.—Sufficient announcements have now been made to show clearly that while the country as a whole was pitying the poor rubber tire manufacturer and extending sympathy for the manner in which the industry was hit, the manufacturers kept as silent as possible and made a new production record.

There are few rubber companies outside of one or two very minor companies that have not done more business in units this year than last, when a new record was established. The lead will probably be taken by Goodyear but during the week Firestone added himself to the list of manufacturers whose 1921 output will be larger than during any previous year. Among the small companies the India Tire and Rub-

NEW SIGNS TO GUIDE US NOW.

Auto Club Blossoms Out With Fancy Safety Warnings.

Heavy Standards to Replace Antiques Now in Use.

Electric Signals Installed at All Dangerous Corners.

Los Angeles is to be "dressed up" with various new sets of signs for the guidance and protection of motorists, according to an announcement issued yesterday by the Automobile Club of Southern California.

TO BE CHANGED.

The entire system of right-of-way signs throughout the downtown district is to be changed tomorrow. It has been found that the signs and standards formerly in use for keeping autos away from the street car safety zones have been too light in weight, and others are to be substituted by the Auto Club.

Heavy standards which will prevent the signs from being tipped over by careless motorists, thus endangering lives, will take the place of the lighter variety. The "keep to the right" section of the sign will also be of an improved shape.

These have been approved by Capt. MacDowell of the Police traffic department.

ELECTRIC ONES.

Electrically lighted signs are to be placed by the club at the most dangerous corners in and about the city. Experimental signs of this character have been already erected on Wilshire Boulevard where corners are particularly dangerous at night.

These signs will show illuminated letters spelling "danger" and will also show a bright red bulls-eye light. General approval of their installation has already been expressed by hundreds of motorists and further erection of them will continue by the motoring organization in the interest of its members and the general motoring public.

LEADS 'EM ALL.

Los Angeles, in carrying out both types of street signposting now leads all cities in America in providing safety steps for auto owners. Other cities are studying the Los Angeles system, it is reported.

SALES PICKING UP AROUND BAY CITY.

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 22.—Reports just received here indicate there was a substantial increase in September over August in the sale of passenger automobiles in Northern California.

Last month there were sold in this part of the State 4421 passenger cars, as against 4111 in August, which is a gain of 310 cars in September.

MANY TRAINS BRING AUTOMOBILES HERE.

Heavy movement of trains of automobiles from eastern manufacturing points to the Pacific Coast is reported by J. T. Saunders, general freight agent for the Southern Pacific Company here.

Two trainloads of Dodges are coming West by way of El Paso and two more via Ogden. Each of the four Dodge trains is composed of forty cars, two bound for Oakland and the other two for Los Angeles.

The Desert—Now's the Time to Pay It a Visit.

Here's Cactus Kate, the high-powered, much-painted stunt car of the Earle C. Anthony, Inc., organization, out for a look at the desert. The big Packard twin six found conditions ideal for a trip into the sandy wastes and members of the party pronounced it well worth while for any motorist to tackle. Above, Cactus Kate inspecting some of the old Indian markings on the rocks at the edge of the desert, and below, a group of palms at a famous oasis in the sand.

DESERT CALLS TO MOTORISTS.

they will depend entirely upon your personal reaction to that vast and empty land whose charm is immensity and desolation and light and color. Or in plain language, either you like it or you don't, and it seems that most folks don't.

START ON RIDGE.

The nine doors to the desert that open from the seaward valleys of Southern California begin with the Ridge route, that barely skirts the extreme tip of the Antelope Valley, that long arm of the Mojave that reaches up to the Tejon. Then, next in order, to the east come the trio of canyons, San Francisquito, Boquet and Mint. Beyond them the Sierra Madres lift an unbroken wall for sixty miles to the Cajon Pass. Then in order comes the San Gorgonio Pass, mightiest doorway of all, guarded on either hand by granite peaks that tower two miles into the blue. East from Warner Hot springs are two more doorways to the desert, the Grapevine Canyon, and the San Felipe-Carrizo Creek road, the latter the most interesting of all from a historic standpoint, but unfortunately the most nearly impassible to a motor car. And, southernmost of all, the Mountain Springs grade leads down to the wastes of the Colorado, and to the fertile Imperial fields beyond.

OUT TO WHITEWATER.

If you have a camp outfit, and want to try a desert excursion, perhaps the best introduction you can have, will be a trip to the mouth of Whitewater River, and a camp on Whitewater Ditch that carries the river water to the ranch below. Take the Beaumont-Banning Road to a point just beyond Whitewater ranch, and take the left-hand road there marked to Twenty-nine Palms, Dalex, Warren's Ranch. It is only half a mile or so, over a sandy road, to reach excellent camping places along the ditch, with plenty of wood and water. The sunrise on San Jacinto will, alone, repay you for the 110-mile drive. Next day you can drive on down to Palm Springs, and inspect the palm canyons, or you can drive over fifty miles of good desert road clear to Twenty-nine Palms, through the Morongo Pass country. South of the Morongo Pass the road to the Desert Queen mine will take you to a wonderful country of eroded granite ridges, high desert, almost 5000 feet in altitude, where the pinyon pines cling to the rocks, and where the dry, bright air has a kick like champagne. There is Indian writing to be found on the rocks in many places as at Coyote Holes for example, and some splendid examples of Indian pottery have been found in caves in the granite hills.

There is good quail hunting around the infrequent water holes, and jack rabbits, of course, with a few cotton tails. The hunting, however, is not good enough to take you that far afield for that consideration alone.

TAKES THEM BOTH.

It takes a sunrise and a sunset on the desert before you can begin to get any conception of the desert's charm. The mid-day light is usually harsh and brilliant; the charm comes with evening and morning. So if you plan an excursion to the desert, be sure to include them. Otherwise you cannot pass fair judgment upon the desert. And sometime, when you are tired of beach and mountains and crowded roads, turn the nose of your car out of one of the nine doors to the desert and get acquainted with the "Land of Plenty Room."

WANDERING WALTER GETS AN EYE FULL.

STEPS RIGHT UP AND ADMITS THAT GRAND CENTRAL GARAGE HAS WORLD BEAT.

"Wandering" Walter Williams is the picturesque name given by an interesting individual who recently visited the Grand Central Garage. "Wandering Walter," who enjoys the distinction of being the world's champion tramp chauffeur, having traveled all over America and Europe as an automobile driver, made the following comment a day or two ago:

"This is the fourth week I've been in Los Angeles so far, and that's my record, as far as staying in one place is concerned. Being born with an engine that's never stalled and has no neutral in its gear shift, I've just naturally had to keep on going, but if I ever do settle down anywhere, Los Angeles is going to be my home.

"In my wandering in various parts of North and South America and Europe, I've never found any difficulty about getting a job driving an automobile or motor truck, or some other kind of motor vehicle, and my work has naturally taken me in an dout of thousands of garages in some of the largest, as well as the smaller cities in the world.

"When I heard, just before I got to Los Angeles, that there was a garage here which claimed to be the largest in the world, I said to myself, 'You'll have to show me.'

"When I got here and gave the place the once over, I had to take off my hat to it. I think I've seen about every garage in the world that can lay any claim to size, but the Grand Central in Los Angeles here has got them all beat."

made as only the utmost trucks to handle the essentials formerly transported by the railroads of this State.

"It would be unreasonable to expect truck operators to rush wildly into providing transportation relief without some assurance as to their future," stated the Mack truck representative. "The investment of large sums of money in trucks for which the use might be only temporary is not to be expected. Interests friendly to truck operation have been maintaining for years the importance of trucks to the public welfare while there have been powerful political influences seeking all the time to curtail and restrict trucks. An emergency now seems imminent. There are counties in this State wherein the large trucks have been barred from the use of the roads. An interesting phase of the highway transport problem would develop, if when rail shipping is suspended, truck operators would refuse service in those counties that bar them under normal circumstances."

GOOD TIME TO HAVE MOTOR LOOKED OVER.

AND MODERN REPAIR SHOPS ARE WELL EQUIPPED TO DO THAT VERY THING.

With summer gone and the winter approaching, it is time to look over your car and see that it is in shape for the coming of the wet weather.

"Here in California," said J. W. Gaffney, local Owen Magnetic distributor, "we do not put our cars away when winter comes. In fact, we use them more than ever. Of course, you can do a great deal of the work yourself, but most of us would rather take the car to some reliable repair shop and have the work done right, at reasonable rates.

"In the olden days men who owned automobiles fought shy of repair shops because they believed that every man who ran one was a crook and many times the automobile owner was correct.

"Now all that is changing. Repair shops and service stations are business institutions which charge according to the amount of work done and not all the traffic will bear. These men have learned traffic will not come when they overcharge.

"Much good work has been done by the California Automobile Trade Association in educating these repair men in the proper methods of doing business.

"Robert W. Martland, secretary-manager of the California Automobile Trade Association, is making a tour of the State now, educating members in the business of rendering better service and in making better business men of them."

MOON SALES SHOW STEADY INCREASE.

With September sales 33 per cent greater than sales for September of last year, F. H. Rengers, general sales manager of the Moon Motor Car Company of St. Louis announces more Moon cars were sold during September than in any previous corresponding month in the history of the company.

After a close analysis of sales, Mr. Rengers states that the most gratifying part of this remarkable increase is that business has not been spotty to any great degree. In other words, a nice volume has been coming in from all sections of the country. The cotton situation has opened up business in the South in great shape, and this, no doubt, has played an important part in stimulating business, because everyone knows that previously, southern business was practically nothing.

One-Fifth Were MACK TRUCKS

—An Enviable Record

One-fifth, or 20 per cent, of all the trucks sold in the United States during the second quarter of 1921, in the same capacities as MACKS are built, WERE MACK TRUCKS.

There are listed 119 makes of 1½-ton trucks, 82 of 2 tons, 103 of 2½ tons, 89 of 3½ tons, 70 of 5 tons, 12 of 6-7½ tons. These are MACK sizes and 1 out of every 5 of the total number of trucks sold by all these producers were MACK Trucks.

The following figures are even more startling: 28.14 per cent of all the 2½-ton trucks; 35.45 per cent of all the 3½-ton trucks; 29.44 per cent of all the 5-ton trucks and 81.04 per cent of all the 7½-ton trucks sold in the entire country within the designated period were MACK Trucks.

This is a significant triumph for the high-grade, completely manufactured truck, the truck with 21 years of successful production behind it, the MACK Truck.

Don't Make Hills Steep Enough to Disturb This Car, Claims Owner

NATIONAL HIGHWAY SYSTEM IS NEEDED.

LITTLE WONDER THAT SENTIMENT FOR GOOD ROADS IS GROWING EVERYWHERE.

The importance of a good system of national highways cannot be overestimated. In America, today, improved roads connect all of the vital points and practically every State, in addition to the work that is being accomplished by the government, is engaged in building roads and then more roads.

"With practically 10,000,000 motor vehicles in use in America today," says Walter M. Murphy, head of the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company, Lincoln distributor, "it is no wonder that the nation-wide sentiment for good roads is growing by leaps and bounds.

"More than one-half of the population of the country today is doing some riding in these vehicles, while there is practically not one man, woman or child who is not served in some way or other by motor-car transportation.

"Here in California the good roads sentiment is very strong and we are blessed with a system of highways that are second to none. That California is strongly in favor of better highways can be well understood when it is noted that expenditures in connection with State highway construction are now exceeding $300,000 per week. The construction program that is now being put forward is said to be in excess of that of any previous period, and when completed, California will be known more than ever as an ideal touring section.

"The present State of highway construction is a far call from the old days of dirt roads. Then the automobile was considered more or less as a toy for the favored few to play with. Today the motor car serves rich and poor alike and instead of being known as a luxury, it is one of the most important utilities of the age."

WHY DOCTORS LIKE INCDOSED CARS BEST.

COMFORTS AND CONVENIENCES ADD GREATLY TO GENERAL VALUE OF MACHINE.

The coupe is by far the most popular motor car among physicians, according to Louis M. Boisot, of Ferguson & Boisot, Los Angeles distributors for Case six-cylinder automobiles.

"First of all," said Mr. Boisot, in commenting on this preference of the medical fraternity, "a doctor requires an all-weather car—one that is always ready for the road regardless of the kind of atmosphere the weather man may see fit to dish up. Coming in contact, as he does, with sickness and disease, it is essential that a doctor exercise every precaution to keep himself physically fit. The coupe protects him from wind, rain, cold, etc., and, of course, the element of comfort is an important consideration, too.

"After he has ascertained that every provision has been made to insure a snug, weather-tight job, the doctor considers the motor, ease and flexibility of control and general ridability of the car. He demands a car with a quick pick-up, plenty of power, an easy gear-shift, velvet-acting clutch, and sure-grip brakes—the kind of a car that can be depended on in emergencies. And in the matter of ridability, the physician requires a car that is free from vibration and jar—for no one has need for steadier nerves than a doctor—especially if he is a surgeon—and vibration, jolts, or a refractory motor are not conducive to calm nerves. Because of this preference, we find a ready sale for Case six-cylinder coupes among the doctors."

MOTOR TRUCKS HELP AMERICAN FARMERS.

VALUE OF FARM PRODUCTS JUMPS WITH COMING OF COMMERCIAL VEHICLES.

The American farmer does $16,000,000,000 more business a year with the aid of motor trucks than he could do without it.

In the twenty years prior to 1900, the value of the nation's farm products rose from more than $2,000,000,000 to more than $4,000,000,000. During the same period, for comparison, the value of manufactured products rose from more than $5,000,000,000 to about $11,000,000,000. In other words, both of them approximately doubled themselves in value.

Now, during the twenty years following 1900, the value of manufactured products practically doubled again rising to about $24,000,000,000. But farm products during the same interval, instead of doubling as might be normally expected, increased nearly sixfold, passing manufactured products with a total valuation of $25,000,000,000. A normal growth for farm products would have brought their value to about $9,000,000,000. The automotive industry, assert Miller tire experts, boosted it $16,000,000,000 more.

BURKE IN CHARGE OF WHOLESALE END.

TAKES IMPORTANT POSITION WITH LOCAL SCRIPPS-BOOTH DISTRIBUTORS.

In line with its aggressive sales policy, the Thomason Motor Car Company, Southern California and Arizona distributors of the 1922 Scripps-Booth, one of the General Motors chain, has created a wholesale department, with B. H. Burke, well known in State automotive circles, at its head, according to L. A. Hannon, general manager of the concern.

Burke, who has been associated in both wholesale and retail capacities with several well-known automobile concerns in the past, and who has made his home here and in San Francisco, is very enthusiastic over Scripps-Booth prospects, not only in this territory, but elsewhere.

"The 1922 car is a great job and the car is bound to be one of the most popular ever turned out in this country," said Burke. "It has the stuff in it in every way and mechanically it is a wonderful automobile. As far as appearance is concerned, it is class throughout." He is now going over the territory visiting dealers and arranging to close certain dealers where a franchise is open.

NAPOLEON'S DESSERT SERVICE.

A French dessert dish of gilt plate, double thread and shell patterns, consisting of two sugar sifters, four spoons, a pair of sugar tongs, twenty-four small spoons, twenty-four forks and knives, with porcelain handles, formerly the property of the Emperor Napoleon, and bearing the imperial cipher of the bee, was sold in a London auction house not long ago. The service was the property of a nobleman whose name is not revealed. —[London Times.

BRUNTON GIVES NEW WINTON A WORKOUT.

SEVERE TRAVELING FAILS TO GET SIGHS OF TROUBLE FROM NEW MODEL.

Robert Brunton of the Brunton studios, accompanied by his wife and a friend, has just returned from a 1400-mile auto trip through the northern part of the State, during the course of which he tried out his Winton sport model. He has nothing but the highest praise of the new model. Out of this total, 170 miles were over the roughest sort of mountain roads and the car met every demand made upon it. The trip was from Los Angeles to San Francisco, thence by boat to Sacramento, then to Lake Tahoe by way of Dutch Flat and Truckee. Returning he made the trip by the Placerville route, to San Francisco and thence to Los Angeles.

"This is the fourth Winton car I have owned," said Mr. Brunton, "and as it was the latest model I naturally felt anxious to see how it would act. In every way it proved satisfactory, meeting all demands put upon it. The grade on the return trip is one of the severest, being for some miles 20 per cent. The car experienced no difficulty in negotiating this steady climb which occurred some distance after leaving the Tahoe Tavern. Despite the terrific strain put on the car, I did not have to make a single adjustment, either before or after the trip. The car showed satisfactory power, both on grades and in pick-ups. The gasoline record was twelve and a half miles to the gallon.

STANDARD UNITS IN BLACK AND WHITES.

TAXIS ARE NEVER TIED UP, FOR EXTRA PARTS ARE ALWAYS AVAILABLE.

Motorists have often wondered what kind of a car is used by the Black and White Taxi and Auto Company, who operate one of the largest taxi fleets in Los Angeles. No name is visible on them. These sturdy cars which give you good service, with rarely ever a mishap, are made especially for taxi service by the Shaw Car Company of Chicago.

They are equipped with a Red Seal Continental Type N motor. They have a Borg & Beck clutch and transmission, Timken rear end, and a Spicer universal joint.

They might properly be named a standard unit car, for every unit in these Black and White taxi cars is known to almost every car owner as a standard, nationally advertised car unit, which has for many years stood test after test and has come down through the years as the best possible unit for that part of the car for which it is used.

These taxis travel on an average of 3000 miles a month each, and it means a considerable loss of money to the owners if any taxi is kept off the street because of repairs. As it is, they are rarely ever in the repair shop over a day or so, for with standard units throughout, one can always obtain any part he may require in a few minutes from the Colyear Motor Sales Company, who keep on hand at all times a complete stock of genuine standard units and parts.

USED CARS GO FAST AT MAMMOTH SALE.

BEING RAPIDLY DISPOSED OF TO MAKE ROOM FOR NEW MODELS.

In preparation for the arrival of the winter stock of cars, increased activity in the new salesrooms of the Warner Motors Co., Inc., is being manifested by members of the sales and service departments, according to George Franklin.

A mammoth used-car sale is now being conducted by Warner Motors Co., Inc., distributors of the Mitchell six. An effort is being made by members of the organization to clean out all of the used cars now on hand. Already a large number of these cars have been sold and Franklin is of the opinion that all will be disposed of before the winter shipment arrives.

Purchasers of used cars have been flocking to the local Mitchell headquarters since the sale started. Increased interest is being taken in the big sale due to the wonderful values obtainable and because each and every car has been completely gone over.

"It is our custom to always give the right of way when we get new shipments," declared George Franklin, "and we are being unusually successful in our current plans because all of the used cars on sale are in the best of condition and are being held at nominal prices."

LEAVE IT IN CARTON!

The spare inner tube should be left in its original carton until the immediate emergency demanding its insertion in the casing. Failure to observe this cautionary measure shortens the life of many an otherwise hardy tube, according to Gordon Williams of Stephens Tire Stores Company.

Marmon Chief Here to Look Over the Land.

Establishment of a Marmon factory branch for sales and service here by the Nordyke & Marmon Company of Indianapolis, announcement of which was made last Sunday, was followed early in the week by the arrival here of F. E. Moskovics, vice-president of the Nordyke & Marmon Company and a national figure in the automotive industry. He stated his visit here would be short, but that before returning to the factory he would make a careful survey of both southern and northern California territory with a view to choosing a permanent Marmon distributor.

Mr. Moskovics stated that, while the appointment of a distributor for this territory would be made shortly, the local factory branch, under the management of Tom Roberts, who is considered one of the best posted experts in the Marmon service and a capable executive, would be maintained in full and complete operation for the benefit of Marmon owners, until such definite announcement was made.

"We feel that our owner family is entitled to every convenience in a way of parts and service that we can provide," said Mr. Moskovics.

Mr. Roberts has a capable staff of Marmon mechanics and salesmen under him and already the organization is running as smoothly as if it had been established for years.

"The appointment of a distributor for this territory will only be made after careful investigation and consideration, for we want the name Marmon to continue as the symbol of the fine car. This appointment may be made within a few days, a few weeks, or even longer, but in the meantime we believe that the interests of the Marmon owner will not suffer in any way."

SAN LUIS OBISPO COUNTY OFFERS MUCH TO DRIVERS.

Land of Romance, Scenic Grandeur, and History That is a Virgin Field for Many Motorists.

San Luis Obispo, the most northerly coast county of Southern California, is a virgin field for the majority of our motorists—a land of romance, history and scenic grandeur. Few have viewed its natural wonders or enjoyed a peaceful ride among the oaks on winding country roads. Too many of our modern charioteers dash madly from one metropolis to the other with scarce a passing glance for the intermediate country.

INTERESTING DATA.

Recently, with this in mind, a Times-Franklin party spent a few days in this picturesque county gathering data on roads and general information of value to the motoring public. The first stop on the run north from Los Angeles was made at Paso Robles, and though there are several detours in Santa Barbara county at the present time, the faithful Franklin averaged thirty-three miles an hour with a gasoline average of twenty-three and one-half miles to the gallon.

An extensive road improvement and expansion program has been planned and partly executed and when it is realized that this county, with an area of 3224.2 square miles, which is three times the size of the State of Rhode Island, has a population only slightly in excess of 30,000, one must feel there is something heroic about this county's effort to keep California famous for good roads. Old bridges are being torn down and new structures erected, a paved highway has been built from San Luis Obispo to Morro on the Coast on up as far as Toro Point, and new territory has been opened up to the settler and traveler by extension of excellent dirt roads—in short, San Luis Obispo county is coming to the front with a rush.

IN GOOD SHAPE.

The first town of any importance reached on the State Highway is Arroyo Grande in the center of a rich agricultural district. Those motorists who have not journeyed north via the coast route for a year or more will be glad to learn that the streets of this town have been paved—and also at San Luis Obispo. A short distance beyond is Pismo Beach, where the clam is king. Perhaps the most noticeable thing about the town proper are the large number of signs reading: "Clams for sale." Nevertheless, despite its reputation as being a rather clammy place, Pismo has a most wonderful beach, the second longest in the world—a twenty-two-mile crescent of hard sand whereon a dozen automobiles may race abreast.

After leaving Pismo the road skirts the sea for a short distance, and a wonderful view of San Luis Bay may be had from the bluffs. Port San Luis is the terminus of several pipe lines from the Santa Maria and San Joaquin Valley oil fields and is said to be the largest oil port in the world, 16,000,000 barrels being sent annually from this point to the markets of the world.

IN THE MOUNTAINS.

San Luis Obispo (City of the Bishop) is a thriving city built amid a cluster of pyramidal mountain was founded in 1722 by Father Junipero Serra and is still in use, though it has been the victim of fire three times, the last in 1920 when the roof burned.

The famous Atascadero colony is of more than passing interest. A few years ago this was a 23,000-acre cattle ranch, but the genius and vision of its founder have made it perhaps the best example of unity and achievement of any colony in the United States. Its growth has been rapid, the residents are prosperous, and it is one of the show places of California.

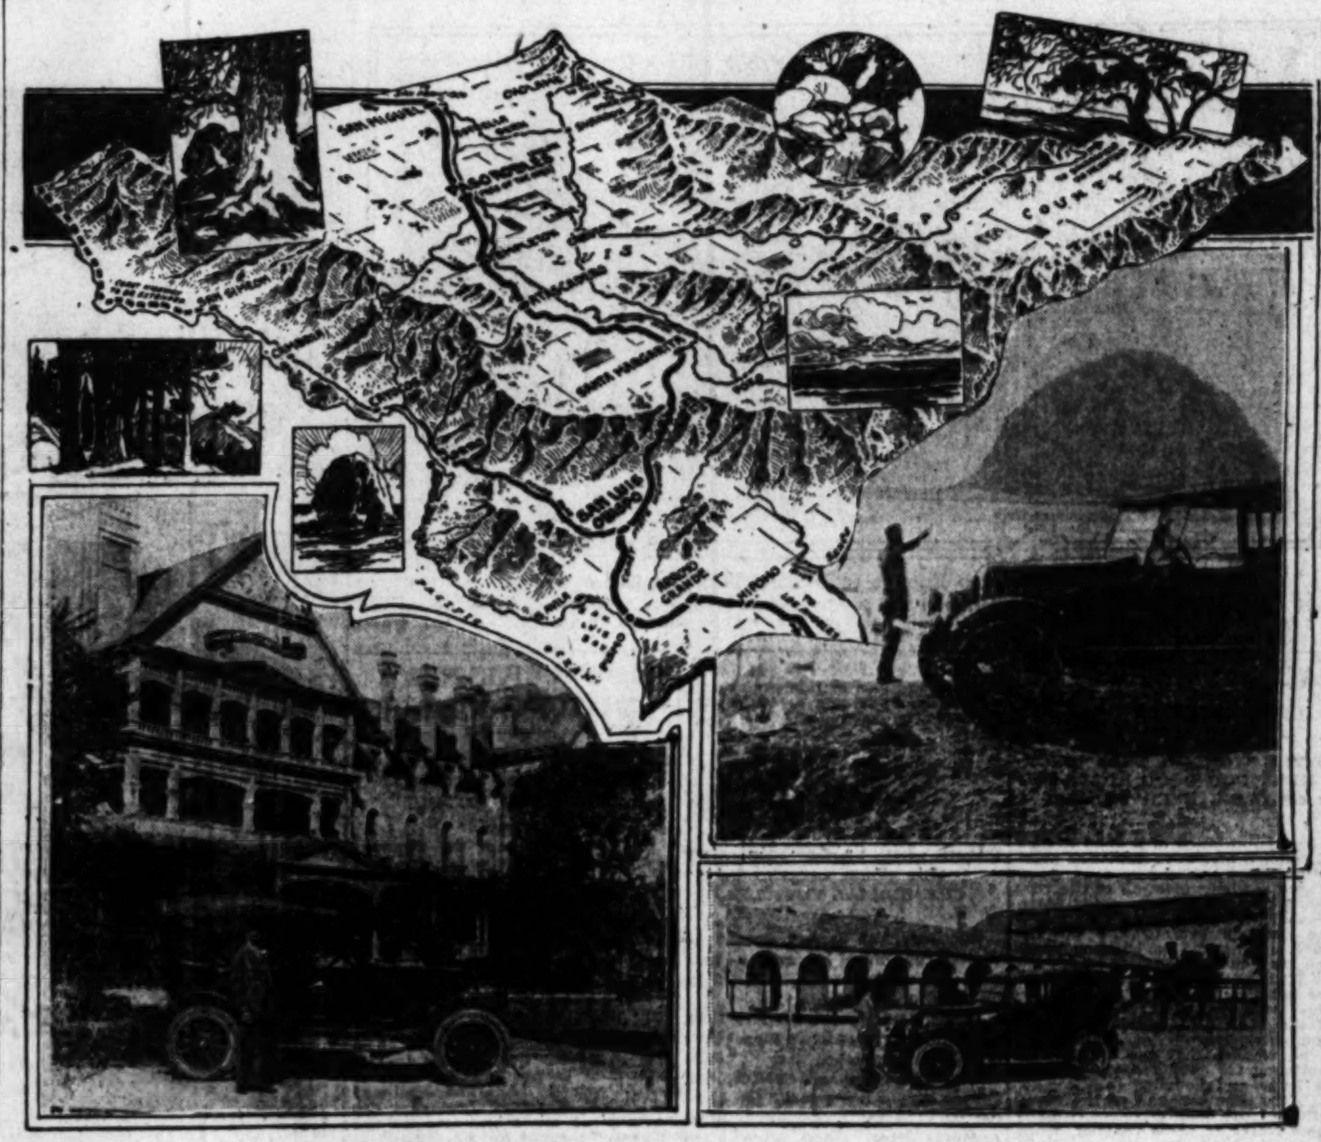
HEALTH RESORT.

Paso Robles, the first day's destination of the Times-Franklin party, has been noted as a health resort for many years. Several hot springs abound in the vicinity and the old hotel, built in 1890, is one of the most artistically situated stopping places on the Coast Route. The full name, El Paso de Robles, signifies the Pass of the Oaks in Spanish, a truly fitting name for this rolling country dotted with the emblem of sturdiness. Close by are the famous almond orchards which bid fair to rival those of Spain.

A few miles to the north is the little town of San Miguel and its old mission, founded in 1797 by Francisco de Lasuen. This is one of the best preserved of the mispeaks. The old mission of that name sions, though it is far from being the finest example of the padres' work. A new concrete bridge is being built across the Salinas River at this point and will be ready for the heavy rains. The road running east from here follows the Estrella River to Shandon on the Santa Margarito to Fresno and Bakersfield road over the Coast Range. Here, along the Estrella, the Times-Franklin party was favored with some of the most wonderful pastoral scenes in California and it was with regret they finally left this meandering stream.

But the greatest scenes of all are along the coast. A wonderfully scenic route leads over the mountains between Atascadero and the sea, and another winds over the hills from Templeton to Cayucos. The motorist who finds himself in San Luis Obispo county should by all means travel either one or both these roads, cutting across from the State highway to the sea. The view down Morro Canyon, with the rock of that name on guard, as it were, a short distance out in the ocean, is one artists rave over. This wonderful rock, sometimes called the Gibraltar of the Pacific, towers 578 feet above the sea and is the most compelling bit of nature's handiwork to be found along the California coast.

Members of the party say that it is not likely you can travel so comfortably and economically as they did unless you have a Franklin, but at all events it is a trip well worth taking, and if you are going to San Francisco or returning to Los Angeles some time you may find it convenient to spend one, two or even three days exploring this motorists' paradise.



Times-Franklin Scout Car Looks Over Scenic Wonders of San Luis Obispo County.

CLEANING THE SPARK PLUGS HAS A STRANGE MEANING FOR THIS MOTOR CAR ENTHUSIAST.

"Hey Swain, my truck don't run first-class shape, what ah you tink is da matta, she jump'a, jump'a, jump'a, I tink ah she break in da middle."

This was the statement made to Charlie Swain, general manager of Service Truck Sales Company, Southern California distributors for Service motor trucks, by one of his numerous Italian friends.

"I will take a look at it," said Swain, "and see what can be done."

After starting the motor, a very bad spark-plug miss was discovered in cylinders 2 and 4.

CLEAN THE PLUGS.

"If you clean your spark plugs, your trouble will be eliminated," remarked Swain. "I suppose you understand how to clean them."

"Sure, what da you tink, I'm pretty good'a first-class ah magneisa, I clean dem all'a right, you betcha my life."

"After a statement like that," said Swain, "I decided to leave my Italian friend, being thoroughly convinced he was a good mechanic. You can, however, judge my surprise when I received the following phone call the next morning:"

" 'Hey, you Swain'a guy, what kind'a monkey bizness you tell'a me? I clean'a da plugs good, now she no want to go 'atall. What time o'clock you can come over here?" '

IN A BAD WAY.

"I immediately went over," stated Swain, "and found that his motor sure was in a bad way. Requesting a wrench, I removed the spark plugs and found a very liberal deposit of carbon on same. I cleaned and replaced them in their respective cylinders and started the motor, and it purred as prettily as a new one. Looking at our friend, I said, 'I thought you cleaned those plugs.' Judge my surprise, when I received the following:"

" 'Excuse'a me, Swain, I no tink they come out, I clean'a da outside in first-class shape.' "

SHOWING SPEED IN TIRE WORLD.

ber company was placed in this column.

During the week a new business analysis was given out by B. A. Shriber, president of the State Savings and Trust Co., in which he points out that the future of the industry cannot be anything but exceedingly bright and that the number of men to be given employment in the rubber factories will materially increase as soon as larger tires are again in demand.

"The world as a whole has underestimated the rubber industry not only in Akron but throughout the country and it will take the balance sheets which are being made up by the rubber companies at the present time to awaken it as to what the industry has done during this past year," he said.

Banks and brokers as well as news writers are anxiously awaiting the forthcoming balance sheet of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, which, it is believed, will be issued some time this month. President E. G. Wilmer intimated several months ago that a report would be available during October and it is believed that when he returns from New York he may see fit to issue it. Unless all present indications fail it will be one of the most encouraging statements ever issued by the company.

JORDAN PLANT ON HEAVY SCHEDULE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CLEVELAND, Oct. 22.—A statement made by Edward S. Jordan, president of the Jordan Motor Car Company, says: "The Jordan factory is now running at full capacity, employing 30 per cent more men than ever before. Production is now on the basis of 500 cars per month and orders have been taken which will keep the factory going at full speed at least until after the first of the year.

automobiles to leave Toledo pulled out of the yards for Philadelphia early in 1917—the busiest year that the automobile business has known. There were eighty-three freight cars in this string, and it took three locomotives to pull it through the Toledo yards.

There were two engines puffing at the head of the eighty-six-car train for Los Angeles today—overland engines.

Reports are coming in from branches and dealers in all parts of the country indicating that the production for November in the Toledo factories will equal or exceed the orders placed in September.

GAS BEING USED.

The permanency of the use of motor cars is indicated by an official statement of the Bureau of Mines this week to the effect that consumption of gasoline during the month of August reached the highest figure when over 503,000,000 gallons were used.

Notwithstanding the reported slackening of motor car production during recent months, the figures on gasoline consumption would indicate that a record number of motor cars were being used.

HEAVY INCREASE.

According to the Bureau of Mines, the heavy increase in consumption of the motor fuel is responsible for a continuation of the decline in the stocks on hand at the refineries despite an increased production. The daily average production of gasoline for August was 13,921,845 gallons, an increase of 385,000 gallons per day over the production for July and an increase of 581,000 gallons per day over the average for the year 1920. Stocks of gasoline on August 31 amounted to 567,645,548 gallons, a decrease of 116,000,000 gallons during the month.

Exports for August amounted to 47,880,586 gallons, an increase of 75 per cent over the exportations for July. Shipments to insular possessions amounted to 1,921,692 gallons. Total production for the month amounted to 431,577,195 gallons. The number of petroleum refineries in operation was 299, the same as in July.

HIGHWAYS NOW IN FINE FORM.

is announced by the Automobile Club, will be completed and open by Christmas. The usual detour via Lankershim, Van Nuys and Owensmouth will still be found.

Repair work on the straightway section of the inland route to San Francisco from Southern California between the bottom of the Grapevine grade and Bakersfield is under way at the present time, necessitating cautious driving at night. On this route a short detour will also be found between Merced and Modesto.

On the San Diego coast route the entire distance will be found paved at this time with the exception of the detour in Santa Ana.

Construction work on the San Diego inland road will be encountered in places from the summit of the Red Mountain grade to Kearney Junction.

Excellent highway conditions are reported by the Automobile Club between San Diego and the Imperial Valley over either the El Cajon-Descanso-Buckman Springs route or the Potrero route.

Motorists traveling to Phoenix and points in Southern Arizona should remember, it is pointed out, that the Mecca-Blythe road is now open and ready for business.

Routes to Bear Valley and the Rim of the World by way of Waterman Canyon, Mill Creek and Crest are better now than they have been heretofore this year.

The club bureau reports that geese are flying at Baldwin Lake.

There has been no rain on the great transcontinental Santa Fe trail for over two weeks and the route is reported in good condition with the exception of a section between Ash Fork and Williams, Ariz., where the road is rough on account of cloudbursts last month. The new road between Peach Springs and Seligman is now open and in good shape.

GETS HEAVY ORDER FOR MOTOR STARTERS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

TOLEDO (O.) Oct. 22.—The Electric Auto-Lite Company, a subsidiary of the Willys Corporation, has received an order for the delivery of 600 starters a day to the Chevrolet Motor Company, and as a result is planning to increase its present production schedules during the rest of this month and November.

Besides that order, the company is supplying 100 starters a day to the Durant Motors, Inc., and is meeting the needs of the Overland, the Chalmers and the National companies.

FROM BORDER TO BORDER.

From the farthest point southwest in the United States to the farthest point northwest, and back again, is the very finest trip a Californian with a motor car can take, according to William Darby, Velie enthusiast, who has returned to Los Angeles after experiencing such a trip, and declares he is already rarin' to go again.

"The scenic beauty to be enjoyed in the journey from one border to the other, through California, Oregon and Washington, is simply beyond comparison, and so varied is it that it must appeal to motorists of every taste and preference," said Darby yesterday. "Mountains, big trees, vast panoramas, ocean, winding rivers, beautiful waterfalls, all in the superlative degree of loveliness unfold themselves one after another to the motorist as he drives along the routes, and best, of all, good roads are the rule for the greater part of the way.

"All one needs is a good car to start with, so that he is sure of freedom from mechanical troubles, then his enjoymant will be complete. The Velie Six I drove had already seen over 9000 miles of service on rough roads; on this trip we added 3000 miles to the distance it has traveled and on the whole long trip not the slightest mechanical trouble developed.

"The motorist starting on such a trip should arrange to camp out as much as the weather will permit, for he will find delightful camping places at almost every point of interest. The sanitary conditions around some of the municipal camp grounds could be very much bettered, but it is always possible easily to find a good clean place to camp in comfort if the motorist will 'scout around' a little bit.

"On the trip we carried in the Velie a very complete camping outfit, weighing at least 500 pounds, and the sturdy little car carried its five passengers and this additional load up the steepest grades and through the deepest mud without a murmur."

Velie on Long Run.
William Darby and his two sons, who recently completed a trip from the Mexican to the Canadian borders in a Grand Canyon Conqueror type of Velie six. The Velie performed like a thoroughbred all the way and all members of the party were equally enthusiastic over the car and the trip. Sketches are from photos made by Darby and show scenes en route. Didn't know there were any geysers in California did you? Well, there are—at Calistoga, Napa county, as the sketch below shows.

Arrival of New Models Adds Pep to Stutz Force.

Considerable enthusiasm is being manifested at the local Stutz headquarters. "There is only one reason for the increased burst of pep," declared J. B. Mungar, local manager of the California Stutz Company, "and that is due to the arrivals of our new models.

"Stutz boosters, who have been anxiously awaiting arrival of the new models, have been keeping the phones busy inquiring about them," said Mungar. "Because of the demand by prospects, and those interested in the Stutz, we have decided to place them on display Sunday.

"Members of the local Stutz staff who have seen the new arrivals are simply bubbling over with enthusiasm. It is quite certain that when the public feasts its eyes on our new models that a furore will take place.

"Due to the reception already accorded the new models we are looking forward to a brisk selling campaign in Southern California. This, of course, will also hold true in the extensive sales territory of the California Stutz Company, which comprises all of California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands.

"In my belief the Stutz car faces a very bright outlook throughout the big territory which the California Stutz Company has just acquired. Our late models have appointments and refinements never before shown on the Pacific Coast, and they are everywhere attracting considerable attention.

"There is a reason, of course, for the popularity of the Stutz line in America today. The Stutz has, over a long period of years, built up a reputation for honest values. It now offers the same sturdy qualities, the same high-grade performance, the same powerful motor, with minor improvements and refinements, at a most attractive price."

Says the Ansted Motor Is Reason For That Punch

Maintaining that the Ansted motor is responsible for the present fame of the Lexington "Minute Man Six" as a hill-climbing car, W. F. Seel of the Lexington Los Angeles Company attempts to describe for local automotive fans the peculiarities of this engine. He says:

"The leading features of the Lexington power plant are: Unusual power per cubic inch of displacement; six cylinders with overhead valves located in a detachable cylinder head; a bearing cooling and lubricating system that feeds oil in proportion to the work actually done; an unusually large crankshaft; a superior type of connecting rod; quietly-operating overhead valve gear; thermostatic control of engine temperature; Moore-multiple exhaust system, Lexi-gasifier and floating type of cylinders.

"Those are the chief characteristics. The builders who designed the Ansted engine had in mind a motor that would be unusually sturdy and yet one that would operate economically and quietly. As a result the main bearings are made of 2 1-4 and 2 3-8-inch diameter, and these with 2 1-4-inch crank pins produced a shaft of unusual stiffness and free from vibration.

"Maximum power was further obtained by the use of large overhead valves 1 3-4 inches in diameter, with 7-16-inch lift, and with rocking chair arms that use this lift without noise."

TRIES "CHEVAL DU BOIS."

Fair Aviatrix Discovers That Spinning on a Dime is Nothing to Landing a Plane.

BY GEORGIA ROSE.

To me it seemed quite exciting, the other day, when three strange airplanes landed in the field. There is ever a thrill in watching an unknown ship approaching in the distance.

Two of them were similar to those I have seen, a difference apparently only in the color. Then there came such a roar of a motor as I had never heard, and there shot into view a huge blue cloudster.

A MERE PIGMY.

The ship in which I fly had always seemed large to me, but it is a mere pigmy in comparison with the Cloudster. The pilot told me that it weighed 4200 pounds, traveled at the rate of 110 miles per hour and could carry 670 gallons of gasoline. This type has been built to meet the needs of commercial aviation. It can be finished as a combination passenger and express plane with a cabin holding six passengers and room for one other outside occupying a seat in the pilot's cockpit.

A large compartment beneath the passenger cabin holds mail, express or baggage. Several, I have been told, are being built for the government, to be used as torpedo boats. The variable load is carried on the center of gravity so that the plane will balance as well empty as with a full load. As it came into the field—big, beautiful, blue, it seemed like a thing alive, throbbing, sentient.

Well, to get back to flying!

After landing at one end of the field, I was taxi-ing blithely back to the line, when suddenly the ship dashed madly about in a half circle before stopping. After we had caught our breath, Mr. Rogers said: "Now what on earth were you trying to do? You had reached the place where you should turn off your motor and you threw the throttle wide open."

"I know it. I had intended shutting it off and was surprised myself when I saw that I had opened it. I had to keep going in a circle until I stopped or I would have gone through the hangar. I must have had a mental hiatus."

"Well, if you have any more, have them out in the middle of a big field. It might startle the occupants of the office to have you tear through the side of the building."

Mr. Rogers says that after having read my articles no woman would care to enroll as his pupil. They would think that he was sarcastic. Really, he isn't. I do think that he makes fun of me, but then they all do that out there, but he has more patience than anyone I ever saw in my life. Were I an instructor and had myself for a pupil, I should have dismissed myself long ago. In school I always proceeded on the theory that a pupil should be told a thing once. If a second telling were necessary it was indicative in most cases of inattention, and to be told a third time was a most serious thing. Mr. Rogers has told me some things 8000 times (these are his figures,) and if we both live, it will doubtless be 8000 more before I graduate.

I can do everything else fairly well, except land. The reason I am so slow at that is because I am no judge of distance. The ship should be leveled off at about ten feet, and I have no idea of ten feet. I suppose I shall get it by practice. The indescribable pleasure in flying is surely worth all the time it takes to learn. One grows to almost love it, as if it were alive, his ship—the result of how much mental effort, imagination, trials, and errors, failures and successes, and many a life lost in high endeavor.

APPOINTS NEW MANAGER.

Owing to the extensive territory recently acquired by Robert R. Pashley in Orange county on the distribution of Chevrolet automobiles, which now necessitates all of Mr. Pashley's attention, he announces as his new manager for the Robert R. Pashley used-car department, 1118-20-22 South Main street, Los Angeles, Mr. Robert Smith, popularly known to a host of friends and acquaintances along automobile row as Bob Smith.

ASKING MORE MONEY FOR ARIZONA ROADS.

MANY MILES OF SOLID CONCRETE HIGHWAY ARE ALREADY COMPLETED.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Oct. 15.—The Maricopa County Highway Commission has about reached the end of the $4,000,000 secured by the county's first road bond issue and is looking toward the sale of a supplemental issue of $4,500,000 authorized by the freeholders. Thus far have been constructed 115 miles of concrete highway, sixty-three miles on the north side of the river, radiating from Phoenix, and fifty-two miles south of the river, around Tempe, Mesa and Chandler. Fifteen miles remain to be laid on the Buckeye road, beside the Grand-avenue stretch of ten miles, to Glendale. In all, about 140 miles of main highway may be completed within the appropriation before the end of the year. About 160 miles remain to be covered, generally on roads of lesser importance, with somewhat lighter construction.

Work has been started on a separate contract for paving the Tempe road from the eastern city line to a connection with the State concrete highway. The distance of three miles will be filled in with bitulithic construction, similar to the city work. This road is believed to have more traffic than any other within the State.

WELL TESTED BEFORE DELIVERY IS MADE.

The W. D. Dunham Ford Agency "break in" every Ford they sell before turning it over to the purchaser.

A Ford comes from the factory only partially ready for delivery, but after it has been fully assembled by the local plant it is ready for delivery.

In order to make sure that every Ford is in perfect condition throughout, this dealer has every new car "run in," "adjusted," "tuned up" and given a "road test" before it is delivered to the purchaser.

MOTORISTS WASTING MILLIONS ON TIRES.

NEGLIGENCE IS COSTING OWNERS HUGE SUMS EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

"About $300,000,000 will be wasted by motorists this year, due to ignorance and negligence in the care and use of tires, is the conservative estimate of leading tire authorities, based on a country-wide service of over 40,000,000 tires," says Hal Baker, sales manager of the Western Auto Supply Company, distributors of India, Pharis and Nebraska tires.

"Slamming on the brakes is perhaps responsible for more tire trouble than anything else. The motorist should always apply his brakes gently, for every time they are jammed on, they lock the wheels, and this causes the tires to skid, which in turn runs up tire bills. Such a practice is useless, for it does not immediately stop the car. Momentum and weight often cause the rear wheels to slide along for a considerable distance and gouge off the tread rubber.

"Then driving with underinflated or deflated tires are two inexcusable faults that shorten the life of many tires. Uusually the correct inflation pressure is marked on the tire by the manufacturer; if it isn't, inquire from our tire expert what pressure is correct. As for a deflated tire, it should always be removed. It is far less expensive to come in on the rim."

JUMP PRODUCTION IN WHITE PLANT.

The production schedule of the White Motor Company was increased 20 per cent the first week in October. Inventory of certain models had been reduced to such an extent that increased production was necessary to take care of demand for these models, it was officially stated. Further evidence of improved business conditions is shown by the fact that September sales were 5 per cent greater than those of August while August showed a 10 per cent advance over July.

SERVICE EVERY HOUR, SEVEN DAYS A WEEK

NEWEST HAYNES IS ON DISPLAY.

Features Opening of New Home by Lynn C. Buxton.

High-Powered Beauty Combines Many New Points.

Haynes Quarters Now Among the Finest in City.

Coincident with the formal opening of his new sales rooms at the corner of Seventeenth and Figueroa streets, Lynn C. Buxton, local distributor, will introduce here this week for the first time the new 1922 Haynes 75 in both open and closed models, according to an announcement made yesterday by G. M. Robinson, sales manager.

NEW QUARTERS.

The new quarters, already attractively and conveniently designed and equipped to meet the demands of the up-to-date automobile dealer, have undergone a complete overhauling during the past week. New decorating has just been completed.

"Congratulations upon our new location are continually being extended us by our patrons and associates on motor row," says Mr. Robinson. "In addition to the commodious sales rooms we now have, we are enthusiastic over the facilities of the service department at our new address. Haynes owners will especially appreciated this improvement.

"We consider it fortunate, too, to be able to christen our new quarters with the new Haynes 75. Since the announcement that this new model was on its way to Los Angeles we have been called upon repeatedly to describe the details of its new features. So that the rousing reception given the car upon its arrival will be no surprise."

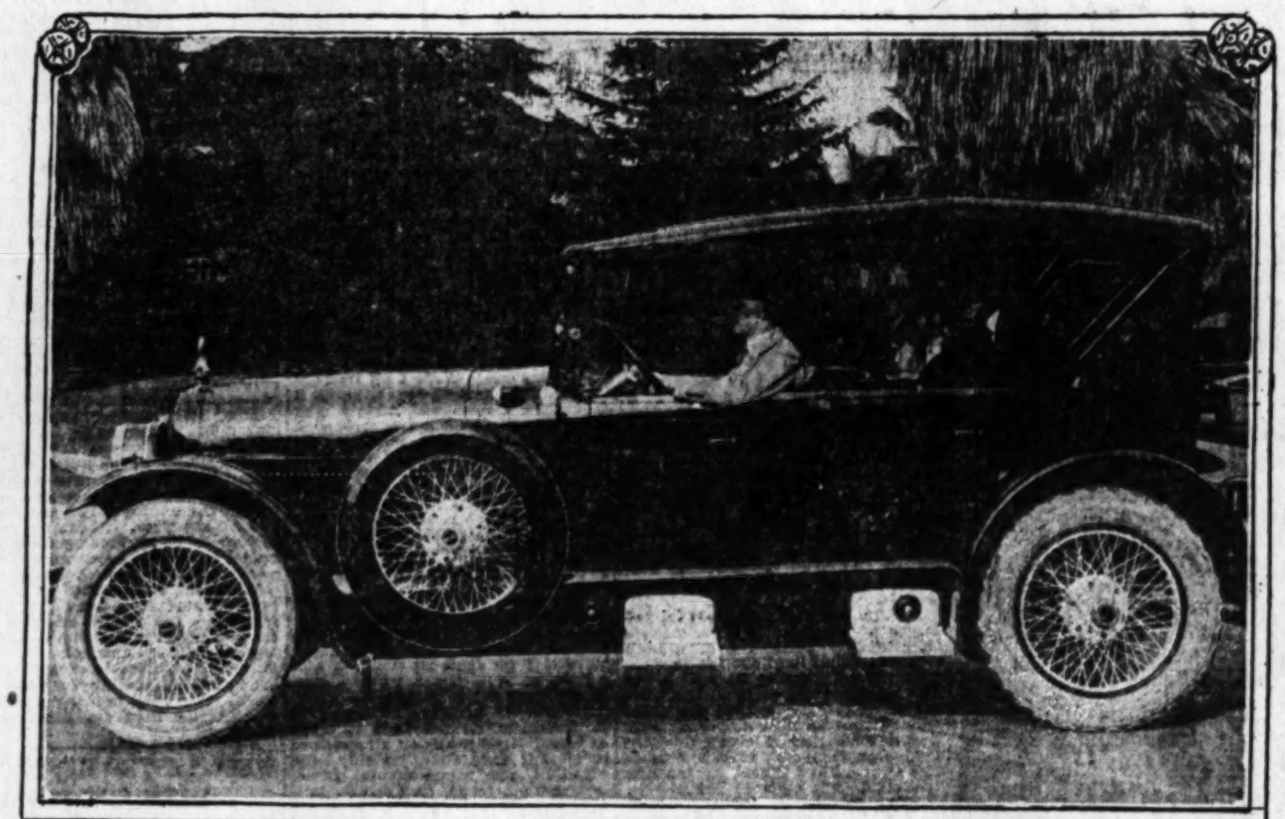
REAL FEATURES.

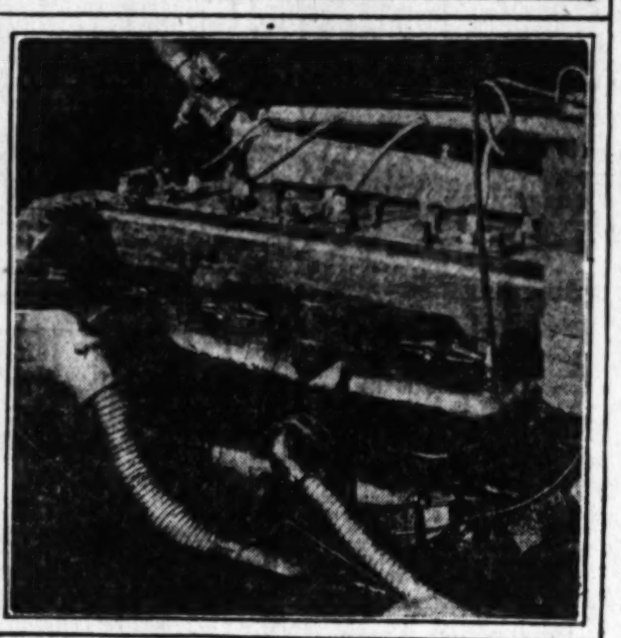
Outstanding among the new features, embodied in the Haynes 75 models, in spite of improvements in body design, is the motor. With the valves mounted on the left side of the cylinder block and inclined four degrees toward the center of the cylinders, this power plant is heralded as one of the most efficient L-head type automobile engines now being manufactured. Although it has an S.A.E. rating of only 29.4, it actually develops more than seventy horsepower on the dynamometer, it is claimed.

CUTTING DOWN SIZE OF RACING MOTORS.

Announcement that the 1923 500-mile race on the Indianapolis speedway will be a competition between cars of maximum piston displacement of only 122 cubic inches has caused no little comment in automotive circles.

"This evidence of the further trend of motor manufacture toward smaller engines," declares J. Benjamin Fahy, local authorized Ford dealer, "should be of especial interest to Ford owners. The motor size limits for the Indianapolis race have already been lowered for times. And last year the cars that competed had a maximun cubic inch piston displacement practically identical with that of the Ford."





New Quarters Opened with New Car on View.

The 1922 Haynes 75 touring car, which will be on display for the first time this coming week at the new salesrooms of Lynn C. Buxton, local distributor, at the corner of Seventeenth and Figueroa streets. Mr. Buxton is shown at the wheel of the new arrival with Sales Manager Robinson watching how it's done from a berth in the tonneau. Below, the improved power plant under the hood of the Haynes 75.

Door Steps Are Giving Running Boards a Chase.

If the question of whether running boards are doomed for ultimate elimination from regular motor car equipment were put to G. M. Robinson, sales manager for Lynn C. Buxton, local Haynes distributor, it is very probable that he would answer in the affirmative. And his reasons for that answer would be found in the increased demand for Haynes models equipped with individual fenders.

When individual fenders and steps first came into vogue this style was optional with running boards, buyers of Haynes cars having the privilege of either design, Mr. Robinson points out. Now there are so few demands for running board equipment that practically all models come from the factory carrying the more up-to-date feature, he says.

"The popularity of individual fenders and door steps is not be be wondered at," declares Mr. Robinson. "They enhance the beauty of the car's design tremendously. Even if not any more efficient than running board equipment they are acknowledged to be a factor in lessening the weight of the car and increasing its general desirability.

"These are the real reasons for the popularity of this new equipment, I believe. Of course, some car buyers have taken a fancy to individual fenders because they are 'new' and are 'in style.' But I believe common sense and good judgment started the idea."

Some Wild Eyes Get a Kick Out of Recklessness

In the attempt to explain the modern motorists' propensity for reckless driving, some believe that they have found the solution in man's innate desire for thrills.

"Ignoring the possibility of mishaps," maintains Fred Rutledge of the Rutledge Motor Company, National sextet distributors, "many motorists really seem to enjoy taking chances. To use the popular expression, they get a 'kick' out of narrow escapes. And this uncurbed desire for thrills is an outgrowth, no doubt, of the fascination for high swings, merry-go-rounds, scenic railway and stolen truck rides, of kid days.

"You would be surprised to know how many motorists deliberately court accident for the fun of the thing. Apparently they enjoy seeing how close they can drive to another car without hitting it or being hit, or how close they can come to a precipitons embankment without sliding over. They even speed up just before a turn, just to determine how quick they can stop, or how fast they can negotiate the corner without a spill. When the motorcycle officer isn't around, some permit the speedometer to climb up beyond the legal limit, for no other reason than that they like the feel of the wind in their faces and the flash of telephone poles dashing past them.

"Anyway you look at it, it's a bad habit and just as blamable as pure carelessness, sometimes even more so."

COMFORTS COUNT TODAY.

The season for the closed car is close at hand. The chill of later autumn is already in the air, while wind and rain are both due within the next month.

"Motoring in the later autumn and winter seasons," states T. C. Whitcomb, general manager of the H. J. Wurzburger Company, Kissel distributors, "finds the closed car a popular one with the buyers. It insures comfort to the passengers and driver in the most inclement weather, and though here, in California, our all-the-year-round temperature and climate make motoring a pleasure from practically December to December, still there are some days when the swish of rain and sting of the wind are unpleasant in the extreme.

"One of the ideal closed-car types for use not only through the winter months, but throughout the entire year, is the Kissel custom-built six coach-sedan. This car represents a new design of the compact sedan type, finished in Kissel black, with luxuriously upholstered four-door coach, with individual steps and sport fenders, two lounge coach seats and with high form-fitting backs, accommodating three people each.

"This coach-sedan is proving very popular, as are all of the models bearing the impress of Kissel manufacture. Kissel custom-built motor cars represent individuality of design, exclusiveness of engineering developments and achievements, elegance of finish, together with completeness of equipment.

"Kissel manufacturing efficiency methods have enabled the company to give particularly attractive values. Reduced prices have been made possible by the reduction in the price of materials and the cost of production, and as a result of this the cars that are sent forth represent a startling investment to prospective motor-car buyers."

PLUNGES INTO WILDERNESS.

Word has just been received by Fred S. Albertson of the Albertson Motor Company, Dodge Brothers dealers for Los Angeles and vicinity, that a Dodge Brothers touring car in charge of an exploration party has achieved the distinction of penetrating farther into Zion Canyon, America's newest national park, than any other automobile so far as known to the forest rangers of the park. Roads were disregarded and the Dodge Brothers car was sent over ground which never before had been traversed by any wheeled vehicle, let alone an automobile. During the trip, which not only took in the wonders of Zion Canyon in Utah, but also the fascinations of Montezumas Castle in Arizona, and which ran the speedometer up to 6700 miles over some of the roughest country imaginable, the Dodge Brothers car performed sturdily and reliably.

According to the information received, Zion Canyon is a marvel of scenic grandeur and bids fair to rival the well-known beauties of the Grand Canyon. Surrounded by rugged mountains and lying in the southern heart of Utah's Rockies, this magnificent canyon has lain undiscovered until the last few years, when it came under the notice of the government and was made into a national park. The canyon is of sandstone formation and the constant wearing of the elements have carved out of this sandstone some of the weirdest and most fantastic shapes and spires. In fact, Bryce's Canyon, which is a little removed from Zion Canyon, resembles a vast pincushion with varicolored pins and needles sticking up all over it. These jagged columns of colored sandstone shape themselves into fluted cathedrals, steeples, pipe organs and temples fashioned by countless years of erosion by winter snows and summer rains. The varying hues of purple, red and yellow under the rays of the setting sun form a picture which can never be forgotten.

The Virgin River, which winds its way on the bottom of this canyon of wonders, and which has never been crossed by a motor car, was forded by the Dodge Brothers party despite the fact that the soft oozy mud gave every promise of miring the staunch Dodge Brothers car. But all of the labors of pioneering on new roads were rewarded at the sight of Bryce's Canyon, El Gobernador, a great white mountain of sandstone, rising hundreds of feet aloft, and the Great Temple of Sinawavan, a huge natural amphitheater, which number only a few of the wonders of this canyon and which are as inspiring in beauty as they are imposing in grandeur.

COOL AUTUMN DAYS BOOST CLOSED CARS.

With the first rain of the season and cool autumn days here, the demand for the inclosed motor car is making itself felt, according to Harris M. Hanshue, manager of the local Apperson factory branch.

"The demand for the inclosed type of car is now being felt in this city and other points in Southern California," states Hanshue, "for our first rain of the season has made itself felt, and others may be expected from time to time. In this connection the Apperson coupe is proving itself to be particularly popular with the buying public.

"The Apperson coupe is an ideal car for the golfer, the business man who desires to run about town, as well as the woman who goes forth on shopping tours. Golfers like the Apperson coupe, for its carries them to the links in jig time, and if they wish to return to their homes without change from their golfing attire they may do so without becoming conspicuous. Golf is rapidly forging to the front as one of the country's most popular games, and with numerous courses located within close proximity to the center of town, the Apperson is always seen in the cars parked at the different links.

"For comfort, roominess, power and dependability, the Apperson coupe is hard to beat. It provides comfortable seating space for three people and its finish and appointments are very attractive. Remember, that this car has proven its good qualities wherever it is used and pleased owners testify to this without being urged to do so."

OLD-TIMER HITS TRAIL WITH BANG.

Antique Hudson Makes a Cross-Country Trip in Splendid Style.

One month ago Paul Weisman's brother, who lives in Chicago, bought a 1913 Hudson roadster, the "33" model, with four cylinders, for $75. He expected to wreck it, sell the parts and make approximately 100 per cent on his investment.

But when the automotice Methuselah was tested out, it performed so beautifully that, as Weisman says, his brother "didn't have the heart to wreck it." Instead, the top was let down and another seat installed so that the car would carry four persons. Then Paul and three friends—Leo McGinnis, Frank Coopper and Daniel Delley, all of Chicago—took a little 1200-mile jaunt into Wisconsin to see how the venerable Hudson would "stand up."

"It stood up so well," said McGinnis, "that we all made up our minds to come to the Pacific Coast in it. We left the poolroom of 'Lefty' Williams, former pitcher of the White Sox, Fifty-fifth and Woodlawn avenue, on September 5, traveling over the Lincoln highway. And here we are—right side up, without any trouble, with an old car that had already traveled 122,000 miles."

It was only a few days ago that Weisman drove the ancient Hudson into the service department of Harold L. Arnold, the California distributor, where it excited a great deal of attention and comment. The four young men, perched amid heaps of luggage, said the principal query hurled at them on the trip from Chicago was, "Can't you fellows get any more on there?"

The boys report that heavy rains were encountered in Iowa, but excellent weather in Nebraska. The roads were in fine shape as far west as Cheyenne.

YOSEMITE IS STILL POPULAR.

Records Show that Hundreds Have Visited Valley During Last Two Weeks.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

YOSEMITE (Cal.) Oct. 22.—Autumn travel to Yosemite is giving California's great park a running start which will help to put attendance for the new "travel year" well over 100,000—far in the lead of the other national parks.

In the first fourteen days of October, 694 visitors reached Yosemite, of whom 428 arrived in 142 private automobiles. This is nearly 100 per cent more travel than in October of last year, indicating the steady growth in Yosemite's popularity during the time of the Indian summer, when the woods are blazing with colors and the cliffs and waterfalls are veiled in a gentle haze which makes the landscape supremely beautiful.

Of the incoming automobiles, sixty-nine arrived over the Wawona Road, fifty over the Big Oak Flat Road, twenty-one over the Tioga road, and two over the Coulterville road. All roads were reported in good condition, better now than several months ago as occasional autumn showers have helped repair the damage done in the congested season.

Train travel to Yosemite also continues heavy, 266 visitors arriving over main-line railroads.

The New REO Six
for 5 or 7 Passengers

In this, the latest creation of REO, accommodation for an occasional extra two passengers is obtained through an ingenious arrangement.

As a 5-passenger this new REO Six provides extra tonneau room that is exceedingly welcome. By removing a floor board from the fore part of the rear tonneau an opening is made into which may be placed another section of floor board to which is attached two auxiliary seats. It then becomes a comfortable 7-passenger car. When not in use the auxiliary seats fold into the back of the front seat.

Features of the New Reo Six for 5 or 7 Passengers

Separate assembly of the rear cushion back. The back can quickly be taken out, disclosing a special compartment for the curtains which may be carried in it unfolded, thus eliminating seaming and cracking of the celluloid lights.

Aluminum instrument cluster.

Solid aluminum instep plates and steering post bracket.

Aluminum bound floor boards and running boards.

Parking lights.

Large plate glass window in rear curtain.

Color of body — Dark blue, or Reo Burgundy, optional.

In equipment this REO Six sets a new standard. The curtains open with the doors and require no fastening when the doors are closed. When all curtains are up they fit so snugly that the car approximates a closed model in weatherproof qualities.

Everything you can wish for in convenience and comforts, and a typical REO overmeasure of strength, power, speed and stability are contained in this new model. And the price, too, is right.

All flights from a tall hill, from possible to glide in which- tion the wind happens to able. The gliders are by a near-catapult much as the paper wads with the rubber band.

In one flight, which lasted fifteen minutes, a pilot made figure eights, steep banks and by the aid of his skill and good fortune in handling his glider in up currents, which he encountered, at one time flew back some 300 feet over his starting point at the top of the hill. The longest flight of the day and unquestionably the longest in history, lasted for more than twenty-two minutes.

The pilots of these gliders show extraordinary skill in handling their light and fragile craft in the gusty currents of air. The lengthy duration marks which they have made are due to skillful handling. The process of flying these craft, which are controlled in exactly the same manner as the orthodox airplane, is to glide along at the maximum gliding angle, in some cases as much as 32 to 1, until an up-current is encountered, when the pilot points his ship upward as steeply as possible until the up-current has passed, when he resumes his gliding. It is apparent that with such a flat gliding angle as 32 to 1, where the plane glides forward thirty-two feet while dropping one foot, a little good fortune in the matter of helpful up-currents would make possible a flight of practically indefinite length.

A great deal of interest is being evinced locally in the two coming aerial meets at Kansas City and Omaha, where airplane racing and commercial contests will hold the center of the stage. Secretary Shellaby of the Aero Club of Southern California points out that the Middle West showmen will have to move rapidly to put up better performances than have been set by the local stick jugglers in the aero shows at Long Beach and the Los Angeles Speedway.

At one time there was believed to be a possibility of local talent taking part in the Kansas City and Omaha events, but when it came right down to sending in the entrance fees the local hopes were among those missing. It had been hoped that the Rogers Airport and Mercury Aviation concerns would send their fast OX5 racers and that David R. Davis would put the Cloudster in the commercial events, but none of these things happened.

Los Angeles is particularly well favored with aircraft to help combat the railroad strike, providing the strike proves serious. There are enough aircraft, big and little, around Los Angeles, to take care of any duties which the motor trucks cannot handle. Without doubt it would be possible to organize a service between this city and San Francisco which would carry all the mail and express essential to the well-being of the two cities. There are two planes hereabouts capable of handling a load of 1000 pounds in addition to their crew and fuel, while the Cloudster can handle twice that much. Numerous other planes in the vicinity can cart as much as 400 pounds without difficulty and the Aero Club of Southern California is mobilizing the local industry with a view to helping out in case of dire necessity.

LUBRICATING TROUBLE.

When a light gray smoke issues from the exhaust in winter it may be taken as an indication that the oil level is high and the lubrication consequently excessive. This may be due to the fact that water or gasoline has leaked into the case and become mixed with the oil. If pump lubrication is employed water getting in here and settling to the bottom may freeze and cause the oil pump gears to shear off, or some part of the pump driving system may be twisted off when the engine is turned over. Again water collecting in an oil pipe may freeze and stop the flow of oil to the bearings. At best the oil is thick in cold weather and flows to the parts needing it rather sluggishly until the engine is thoroughly warmed up.

SOLVING YOUR AIR PROBLEMS.

[Questions dealing with practical aviation will be answered each week through this column by an expert of the Rogers Aircraft, Inc. Questions should be written as concisely as possible and mailed to the Aviation Editor, The Times.]

Aeronatical Editor of The Times: Will you please explain in your columns the meaning of "factor of safety of an airplane and what should be the minimum factor of safety of monoplanes and biplanes? J. G. Paulson, Santa Paula, Cal.

Answer 1. The factor of safety of an airplane is most easily explained by a simple example. Presuming that a plane fully loaded and ready to take the air weighs 2000 pounds and has a factor of safety of seven to one. This means that its sustaining surfaces will stand a weight of 14,000 pounds before the breaking point is reached. Answer 2. The minimum factor of safety for a biplane should be four to one, monoplane six to one.

Aeronautical Editor of The Times: I have recently purchased a Curtiss OX-5 90 horse power motor for experimental work and would be pleased if you would give me the following information: (1.) At what clearance should the valves be set? (2.) What are the best oils to use in this motor? (3.) What is the maximum of r.p.m. that I should get out of this motor in good working condition? E. A. Keith, Los Angeles.

Answer 1: Both intane and exhaust values should be set at a clearance of 10-1000 of an inch. (2.) Most any heavy tractor oil is suitable, Mobile B, Quaker State, Aristo, Apex and Zerolene No. 9 are used extensively in this section. (3.) The manufacturer's instructions state that this motor should develop 1400 r.p.m. at full throttle with a propeller of eight feet three inches diameter and 5-foot 6-inch pitch.

Aeronautical Editor of The Times: I have been considering the purchase of a Hispano Suiza aeronautical motor. Will you tell me which models of this motor are known as wet sump motors and which are dry sump motors. T. M. Robinson, Douglas, Ariz.

Answer: Hispano-Suiza motors, type A and AA, are wet sump motors, type I and E are dry sump motors.

Aeronautical Editor of The Times: Will you kindly inform me what magnetos were used on the Hall Scott A7A motor and what ignition system does the later type of Hall Scott motors employ? W. A. Newton, Los Angeles.

Answer 1: Hall Scott A7A motors were equipped with Dixie magnetos. (2.) The later type Hall Scott airplane motors are equipped with the Delco ignition system.

FALL IS BEST TIME FOR TOURING HERE.

BUT WHILE ON LONG TRIPS KEEP AN EAGLE EYE ON THE OIL YOU USE.

While in many parts of the country, especially in the east and Middle West, motorists are putting their cars in the garages and then looking expectantly at the "bob-sleigh" rusting there in the barn, in California the best motoring season is just beginning.

When the sun loses a little of its vigor and the cool breezes of fall and winter begin to freshen, it is then that many motorists commence to think of the year's vacation, according to A. A. Derry, manager of the Los Angeles Motor Supply House, Inc., head distributors of Veedol products in Los Angeles. And with the thoughts of a vacation come the thought of a motoring trip to some of California's show places.

In California, where boulevards are as ordinary as corn in Iowa, the call of the road is natural and most motorists spend their vacations on a motor tour. They find it unnecessary to make the tire provisions and other preparations of the eastern motorists, but many, in such luck, overlook an important factor in motoring—oil.

It is on the road, on a tour, according to Mr. Derry, that the motorist finds the difference between cheap oil and good oil. In ordinary running, cheap oil will do after a fashion, but usually in the long run the cheap oil breaks down quickly. Good oil pays for the slight difference in price by protecting the wearing parts of the machine.

TREES WOULD HELP STATE BOULEVARDS.

What a difference it would make if the State Highway Commission should decide to plant trees along both sides of the principal highways.

"During my vacation this summer," states E. E. Caister, manager of sales for the Standard Steel Automotive Products Company, distributors of the Standard Eight, "I confined my motoring to California. Everywhere I found beauty, in valley and mountain, desert and seacoast. Some of the driveways were inspiring in the extreme, but I would award the palm to Riverside in maintaining one of the most beautiful highways in the State.

"The fame of her magnificent drives is told the world over. Twenty miles of magnolia, pepper, palm and eucalyptus and grevilleas are to be found there. Magnolia Drive is unsurpassed for loveliness, and the air is fragrant with the odor of the wax-like blossoms in the season. Its foliage is almost as beautiful as are its fragrant blossoms.

"Under the semitropic sun on a summer day, the cool shade along the tree-bordered highways is very grateful. Riverside, in this respect, presents unusual charm. The city itself is an ideal one for the motorist to visit on any tour of the southern section of the State."

THIS OIL IS THERE IN EVERY INSTANCE.

Quaker State motor oil, if one is to judge by its record, is quite a performer in the world of lubricants. Most everybody in Southern California knows how efficiently and economically it serves in automobiles, but motorists had quite a shock a couple of months back when they heard that Emory Rogers's fast monoplane, which won the Curtiss cup race, had included Quaker State in its diet.

Then last Sunday Ralph Hamlin snorted around the inner harbor at San Pedro in the Joker, his speedboat, winning the motor-boat event of the Cabrillo celebration, hands down. Of course, he used Quaker State—wouldn't dare run the Joker without it. And he hints that the motor oil that works in speedboats and airplanes is quite some oil for automobiles and tractors.

PUT MILES AWAY AT A FAST CLIP.

From Indianapolis to Los Angeles in Twenty-three Actual Driving Days.

Having logged 6200 miles since leaving Indianapolis, C. L. McIlvain and party of five are now in Southern California, after having averaged 270 miles daily for twenty-three actual driving days, while on a transcontinental tour in a peerless two-power range eight. This is probably the greatest mileage record ever piled up by an automobile while on a tour in so short a time. The details of the run were given by McIlvain to Stanley W. Smith of Smith Brothers, Peerless distributors for Southern California.

The party drove to Denver via Chicago and the Lincoln Highway and then struck northwest to the Yellowstone by way of the Rocky Mountain Highway that passes through Cheyenne and the State of Wyoming. "We traveled along with the delegation that officially opened this new traffic artery and also the new south entrance to the Yellowstone National Park," said McIlvain. "It is new, and of course, with comparatively little work done upon it, is in pretty bad shape. However, one sees wonderful scenery going in from the south.

"Heading for Seattle from the Yellowstone, we had some good and some bad going with thirty per cent grades to pull—and we made every one of them. We passed the Wind River at its source and one branch of the Missouri. From Seattle we went over the Pacific Highway to Portland and came southward over the central or valley routes.

"Traveling this way is the only real way to see the country and learn of geography and local conditions in general. It's an education that can be gotten no other way. There is not a one in the party who would have missed it for anything. For the entire distance we averaged 14.8 miles per gallon of gas. We had no mechanical trouble of any kind."

TWO-SPEED AXLES ARE GOING ABROAD.

Glover E. Ruckstell, head of the Ruckstell Sales and Manufacturing Company, has announced that his company has already commenced exporting a Perfecto two-speed axle to the Orient. Last week a large shipment of this California product went to China and two consignments have gone to Ford dealers in the Hawaiian Islands.

F. C. Charles,

Who has just been appointed sales manager for the Elgin Motor Sales Company, distributors for this car in Southern California. Mr. Charles has had wide experience in the local automotive field and is unusually well fitted for his new position. During the few days that Mr. Charles has been at the helm of the Elgin here, pep has increased a thousand per cent in the local organization.

Charles Named Sales Manager for Elgin Six.

The most recent addition to Mr. Ford Rieman's staff of the Elgin Motor Sales Company is Mr. F. C. Charles, who now holds the important office of sales manager for the distribution of the Elgin six in Southern California and Arizona.

Mr. Charles has been a resident of Los Angeles for the past twelve years and has cultivated a large circle of business acquaintances. He is also widely known socially in Southern California, where there are many alumni from his alma mater, Ohio Wesleyon University. Mr. Charles is a member of the Phi Delta Thata Fraternity and many clubs.

After graduating from college, where he trained specially for commercial life, he did extensive sales research work for the Miller Rubber Company of Akron, O., assisting in the building up of their sales organization from the very beginning of the firm's existence.

The motor car presented to Mr. Charles a more inviting field for development and for the past number of years he has devoted his energies exclusively to this work. In regard to his taking over the sales managership for the Elgin six, Mr. Charles states, "I regard the Elgin six as one of the most popular cars in California. Its endurance, economy and beauty meet every requirement of Southern California motorist—hence its big sales."

Reos Knock Off High Honors in Beauty Contest.

Taking prizes in a beauty contest is a new and rather unique roll played by a Reo sedan and touring car. But this is what happened at the International Wheat Show in Wichita, Kan., the other day, and a description of the beauty parade has just been received by Byron C. Foy, local manager of the Reo Motor Car Company of California, in a letter from the Wichita distributor.

The Reo touring car was entered in the $1000 to $2000 class, and the new sedan was entered in the $2000 to $3000 class. The points upon which the judges based their decision were appearance, smoothness of operation and ease of control. The Reo sedan took first prize and the new Reo light seven outranked everything in its class. The automobile fashion parade and contest were features of the wheat show in Wichita. More than 100 cars of different makes were entered in the show.

According to reports and newspaper comments from Wichita, the Reo passenger cars which were exhibited during the fair attracted unusual attention. Particularly the new Reo light seven was an object of considerable interest among the auto enthusiasts. During the exhibit every car entered in the beauty contest was put through its paces the same as at a horse show and both the Reo sedan and the new Reo light seven surpassed the other entries in point of appearance, both models scored heavily in regard to smoothness of operation and ease of control, and established the new Reo line of passenger cars as the most beautiful in America.

REPAIRED FENDERS GIVE WAY TO NEW.

"The tendency among automobile owners whose fenders have been damaged is more and more in the direction of new ones rather than having the damaged fenders repaired," says C. C. Eichenhofer, proprietor of the Atlas Auto Works.

Mr. Eichenhofer went on to say that while fenders that have been in collision can be made to look like new, the majority of owners indicate a preference for brand new fenders—they are disinclined to travel around with the patched up articles. The manufacturing of fenders for all makes of cars at the Atlas Auto Works has become one of the important features of the Hope-street institution.

Kansas to Pasadena Without a Single Cent Being Spent for Motor Repairs.

Are you interested in the economy record of your motor car? If you are, this story would hold your attention.

From Wichita, Kan., to Pasadena without spending a red cent for repairs was the pleasant experience of William Auw. And what is more the Kansan gives all the credit for the success of his trip to his Oldsmobile.

Auw was accompanied on his trip by three persons. They traveled 1780 miles, averaging eighteen miles to the gallon of gasoline, and only using two gallons of oil on the trip. In fact, when they arrived in California the crankcase was full of oil.

Nearly all of the trip, according to Auw, was made in high gear, including the difficult Raton Pass in New Mexico. Since he purchased his Oldsmobile Auw has driven it 6000 miles, and he is yet to experience any difficult with it.

"Oldsmobile owners are always a satisfied lot," states L. V. Starr, local manager of J. W. Leavitt & Co., Oldsmobile distributors. "There is a reason for this. The Oldsmobile is an exceptional motor car, combining beauty of appearance with power and really wonderful performance. Take the Oldsmobile four, for instance.

"The most distinctive feature of this car is its remarkable power. Its low operating expense and its beauty of appearance, combined with appointments and excellence of finish, also aid in making it a prime favorite with the buying public of today."

CIVILIZATION MOVES WITH TRANSPORTATION.

From the ancient days of Dinosaur-drawn stone cart until the present time, the history of civilization has been the history of transportation. This, says Clarence A. Earl, president of the Briscoe motors, is the true light in which the automotive industry should be viewed today.

It is true, says Mr. Clarence A. Earl, that certain readjustments must be made, inventories must be reduced, cars must be designed and built, which will meet the public's need of economy, reliability, beauty and day-after-day service. All these things, however, are but temporary. Those who see in the present situation anything but a real opportunity have a wrong conception of business of transportation.

FINAL TEST IS A UNIQUE ONE.

It's the Ear That Gives Last Judgment on Car.

Song of Motor Must be Exactly the Right One.

Willys-Knight Experts Have an Interesting Job.

"It takes tuned ears to tune a motor," says J. F. Thomson, local manager of the Willys-Overland Pacific Company Willys-Knight and Overland distributor, in discussing methods of manufacture the other day.

"As the motoring public generally realizes today, the automobile 'trouble shooter' depends upon his sense of hearing to discover quickly motor ailment. The better motor cars before being shipped from the factory are today subject to test by experts known as 'final testers.'

BY SOUND WAVES.

"These men make exceptionally good wages because of their ability to judge a motor merely by the sound waves produced when it is running. But the testers of the Willys-Overland Company are probably the most famous of America's final testers through the fact that the motors are exceptionally quiet when in operation.

"The Willys-Knight motor is of sleeve-valve design. All the clashing, moving parts of the ordinary poppet-valve type motor are eliminated. The sleeves, moving up and down on a film of oil, control the flow of gas into the cylinders and the exhaust of the burned gases through ports cut into them. The smooth quietness of true power is possible because there are no tappets, cams, push rods and valve stems.

"Wherever there is high speed motion there must be some vibration, and vibration means sound waves in motion. The ordinary poppet-valve motor has a well-defined 'song.' When it is singing out of tune it is readily noticed. But the tester of the Willys-Knight has a difficut job, for his ear must be attuned to even the faintest of noises if he is to send out a motor meeting Willys-Knight standards.

TAKES GOOD EAR.

"A 'final tester' passes upon a number of cars daily. His first car of the day may be 100 per cent. The next one has a slight noise, while his third one may be a bit noisier. It can be seen how difficult his work must be if the Willys-Knight standard is to be maintained.

"At least every other day this 'final tester' takes out and drives for several miles a Willys-Knight car whose motor is as perfect as human hands can make it. It has been worn in, its every part has been adjusted and readjusted until its hum of power is the Willys-Knight motor hum.

"The tester's ears by this very process are 'tuned.' Of course, the motor is first tested after it is built, it is again tested in the factory's 'silent room,' and it is tested after the car is completely assembled.

"But no Willys-Knight goes forth until one of the 'final testers' has listened to its song and has signed its o. k. or sent it back for readjustment."

MAXWELL STAFF IN CONFERENCE.

Southern California Dealers Gather for Meeting.

P. H. Greer Predicts a Bright Year for Industry.

Famous Film, "Something New," is Good Salesman.

Maxwell dealers throughout Southern California gathered here last Monday for a conference with officials of Union Motors, Inc., distributors of the Maxwell, and after spending the morning in consultation with George Pearson, Jr., manager of sales for the distributing firm, were taken to the Athletic Club where a luncheon had been prepared in the Blue Room.

At the close of the luncheon the dealers listened to the story of the reorganization of the Maxwell Corporation last spring and an outline of the history of the car and its bright outlook for the future by P. H. Greer, director of the company, who acted on behalf of its president, A. C. Robbins, who had been called north to San Francisco on important business.

F. P. Harris, wholesale manager for the Greer-Robbins Company, gave a short talk on "Sales" and offered the dealers some excellent advice on handling their business as gained through his years of experience as a salesman and executive. Mr. Pearson also talked at some length on the Maxwell car and the outlook for the future. Arrangements were also made for a dealers' driveaway to take place later in the week.

Some excellent music was rendered by Mr. Harvey Ball, vaudeville artist, from San Diego, who had accompanied J. L. Maddux, the San Diego dealer, here for the purpose of aiding in staging the film "Something New" at Philharmonic Auditorium. Mr. Maddux later addressed the dealers and offered them a showing in their respective cities of the film, which utilizes a Maxwell car in a thrilling Mexican border romance and in which the car performs feats that would ordinarily only be expected from a chamois or a Catalina goat. Mr. Maddux stated that after showing the film in San Diego he had sold nearly fifty cars within the space of less than four weeks and that he attributed almost the entire number of sales to the effect produced by the film.

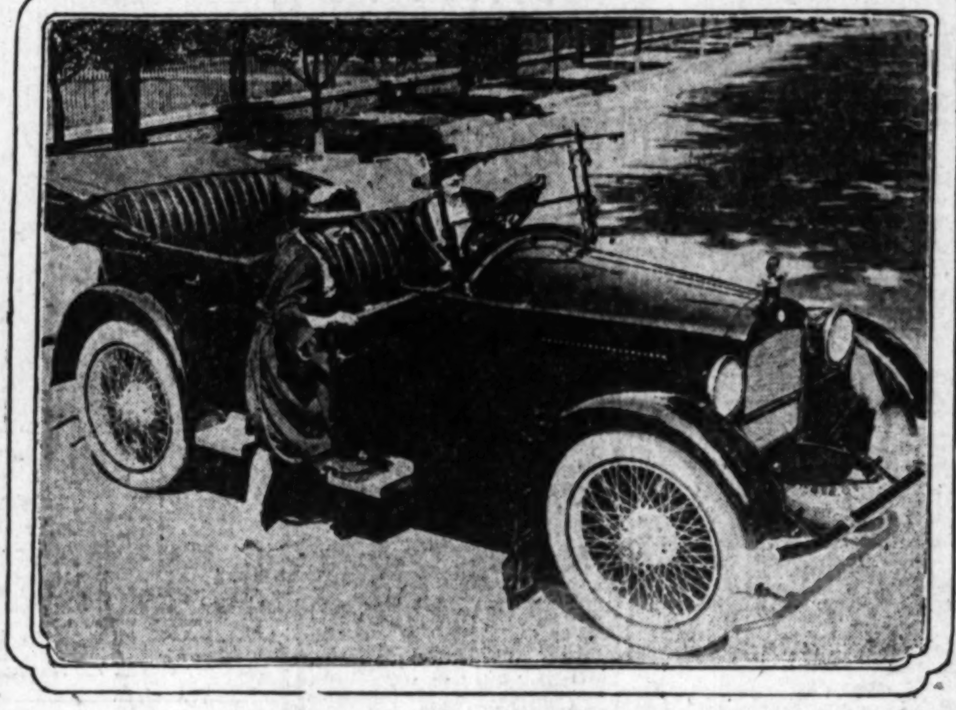
GOLF AND THE MOTOR CAR ARE INSEPARABLE.

THEY GO HAND IN HAND ALL OVER THE COUNTRY THESE DAYS.

Golf and the motor car are inseparable today. Wherever the royal and ancient game flourishes there you'll find the motor car.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, who are known as motion-picture stars and who are appearing in person at the Orpheum, are ardent golf fans, and besides that they know what is the best in the motor car world. The pair, during their stay in Los Angeles, have tried the municipal golf course on numerous occasions and pronounce it as one of the finest they have ever played over.

In journeying to the links they found traveling in the new five-passenger Kissel de luxe sedan a real pleasure. The splendid riding qualities of the car and its ease of operation they found particularly attractive. From now on Bushman and Miss Bayne are willing to be classed as Kissel fans.



A Product of the Greer-Robbins Shops that is Making Motorists Look.

It is the Hupmobile sport model fresh from getting all dolled up in the shops of the Greer-Robbins Company, local Hup distributors. The machine is decidedly natty in appearance and is attracting not a little attention from motorists in general and the custom builders in particular.

HUPP SPORT MODEL HAS THEM LOOKING.

PRODUCT OF GREER-ROBBINS SHOPS IS ONE OF HANDSOMEST IN LINE.

A Hupmobile sport model, the work of the shops of the Greer-Robbins Company, Hupmobile distributors for California, Arizona and Nevada, is the cynosure of all eyes on the company's salesroom floor at Twelfth and Flower, and on one occasion when it was on the streets in order to secure some photographs, it attracted a great deal of attention, according to Sales Manager Billy Williams of the retail Hupmobile department.

Simple, yet effective, treatment reveals to excellent advantage the beautiful lines of the job, and gives it the appearance of a car costing much more. The stock running boards, fenders and artillery wheels have been removed and in their places are individual fenders, individual aluminum steps and white wire wheels. There is also a spare wire wheel. Bumpers, motometer and side wings are included in the equipment. With the top down, the Hupp sport has a long, low and rakish appearance that is very pleasing.

"Since our last price reduction became effective we have been very busy filling both wholesale and retail orders," declared Williams. "The Hupmobile has grown to be a very popular car with all classes, regardless of pocketbook, and the reduced price has materially enhanced its value."

Willys Factory Output Speeding Up at Fast Clip.

According to advices received here by J. F. Thomson, branch manager of the Willys-Overland Pacific Company, the Willys-Overland factory is turning out 300 Overland and Willys-Knight cars daily. This, it is stated, is within 100 cars daily of its 1920 maximum production program.

This announcement was made last week by Charles B. Wilson, vice-president and general manager of the Overland organization. It is further announced that owing to the improvement in routine and organization, efficiency has been increased to such an extent that the Overland factory is now producing 2.55 cars with the same number of men as it formerly required to produce one car.

Three factors, according to Wilson, have figured prominently in the great improvement in the Overland situation. Willys-Overland cars have been radically improved in the last three or four months. So marked has been the improvement that in most quarters the new Overland and the Willys-Knight are pronounced as "the greatest cars the Overland company has ever produced."

Another factor is said to be the almost revolutionary change in the distribution of the cars. Most distributors have been eliminated. Their commissions are being divided between the company and the dealers direct. This increased dealer profit has materially improved the morale of the sales force, it is stated, and has resulted in an increase of 410 selling points within the last few months.

The third factor, it is stated, has been the reduction in price, which have brought the Overland and the Willys-Knight prices to the lowest level in the history of the company. Great efficiency of labor is said to have been an important factor in bringing reductions about.

"The sedan was on our sales floor just two hours when we had to hang a sold tag on it. Everyone who has seen it says it is the smartest closed car on the market, and this also goes for the coupe."

BE A COP AND KEEP AN EYE ON YOURSELF.

WOULD CUT TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS BETTER THAN BIG ADDITIONS TO FORCE.

Instead of yelling for more laws and more policemen to curb motoring recklessness, Los Angeles motorists would do well to begin boosting No Accident Week today.

At least that is the burden of the suggestion made by J. C. McGill of the McGill Motor Company, local Gardner distributors. He says:

"In addition to pledging himself to the support of No Accident Week in December, every Los Angeles motorist should begin right now to observe the tenets of the motto, 'caution, courtesy and cool-headedness.' He should begin vying with his fellow car drivers in eliminating the causes of accidents.

"If we would all put our shoulders to the wheel, exercise our quota of good common sense to the utmost, the number of accidents in Los Angeles would be lowered to such an extent that a good record of sane motoring would become a habit. If we wait until December 4 to start this program, the good resolutions we plan to renew then may prove as futile as the average New Year's resolutions."

NASH FOUR DROP GETS ORDER RUSH

Huge Plant at Milwaukee is Now Turning Out Cars at a Record Rate.

The new low price established on the Nash four, together with the announcement of quantity production, which makes for immediate delivery, has resulted in the biggest activity in this new Nash line that has been recorded since its first appearance a little less than a year ago.

This is the statement of H. J. Coger, vice-president and general sales manager, of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors. The reduction in the price of the Nash four amounted to $175.

"Until the announcement of this new price, the Nash four was a hand-made car," said Coger. "Now the new four plant at Milwaukee, which is being devoted exclusively to the production of the four-cylinder job, is entering into quantity production that not only assures quick and generous deliveries, but enables the factory to price the car at a figure that is without parallel in cars of this class."

Mr. Coger declares that the announcement of the new price has precipitated an interest and demand that has surpassed his expectations.

"We had no conception of the amount of missionary work the Nash four cars on the road have been doing during the past few months," said Coger. "These cars in the hands of their owners, through establishing records for economy, power and endurance, have built up a public confidence, the extent of which even we underestimate.

"With the new price that has now crystallized itself into buying will, and this has been accentuated by the knowledge that immediate deliveries are possible."

GENERAL MOTORS TO SPRING A SURPRISE.

AT LEAST THAT'S WHAT'S BEING GENERALLY RUMORED THESE DAYS.

The General Motors Company, of which the Oakland Motor Car Company of Pontiac is a unit, is about to announce one of the most sensational bits of gossip since the inception of the motor-car industry, according to an underground report received by Reeve Gartzmann, president of the California Oakland Motor Company, distributors for the Oakland in California.

"Unknown to many, the General Motors Company represents a $600,000,000 organization controlling the source of supply for its many motor car and motor truck factories as well as institutions for the financing of dealers and of lease contract sales," says Gartzmann.

"Advice has come to me of a movement by this concern that will practically work a complete change in the merchandising of motor cars in this country. Just what these plans are I am not at liberty at this time to divulge, but the motor world can look for something sensational in the extreme. It will affect every unit of the General Motors organization and will serve to strengthen every make of car built by the company.

"Naturally we are interested as we are the distributors for the Oakland, which is one of the oldest of the General Motors Company units, and with many new policies already in force at the factory, which serve to better this popular car we feel that the plans will serve to build up the demand and the supply of this car."

TRUCKS WILL PLACE FARMER NEAR MARKET

ELIMINATE MIDDLE MAN AND ALL THE ATTENDING PROFIT LOSSES.

"The steadily decreasing cost of living has been noticed by everyone during the past six months, and especially by the farmers, to whom a drop in the cost of living usually means a drop in the prive they receive for farm products," says D. F. Poyer of D. F. Poyer & Son, distributors of Transport trucks for Southern California and Arizona.

"The farmer, during the war, experienced a period of great prosperity," he says. "He is never going to return to old days and old ways. His mode of living is on a higher plane. How then, is he going to meet the reduction in the price of farm products which have lead the way in the general price deflation?

"There is a way whereby he can deliver his products to the market cheaper, and it is by direct marketing. Marketing conditions for food products of farmers must be bettered. The marketing of farm products has for years been handled through the middleman whose profits have far exceeded those of the farmer, although the time and effort put forth by the middleman are not to be compared to the labor and time of the farmer.

"It is a case of getting together—of shortening the miles to market by building good roads and manufacturing motor trucks to travel over these roads with big loads of produce. The farmer and the market must be brought closer together with all the big profit-making agencies between the two, as far as possible, eliminated."

SPEED KING IS FAN FOR CLOSED CAR.

Even Eddie Hearne Likes to Ride in Real Comfort Now and Then.

Desiring to escape the exposure to wind and weather he is forced to face in his speedway experiences Eddie Hearne, famous racing pilot of Los Angeles, after driving a Stephens touring car for over a year, has purchased a new model salient six sedanette.

Before he consented to put his signature on the well-known dotted line, however, Eddie gave the new car a thorough tryout. It has been learned. Among other things he expressed a wish to test the equilibrium of the Stephens. So he took the sedanette out to the Beverly Hills Speedway, the scene of many of his racing conquests in the past and where he will perform for the benefit of speed fans during the coming winter. And there he opened up the throttle in true Hearne fashion, paying particular attention to the way the sedanette held to the track on the turns.

Although the exact comment made at the close of this test by the famous pilot is not a matter of record, it is a significant fact that he entered enthusiastically into the deliberations that concluded in the purchase of the sedanette.

This latest addition to the display of new Stephens salient six models at the salesrooms of the White Auto Company, local distributors, is receiving marked attention on motor row during the present inauguration of the closed-car season. Incorporating all the latest principles of body design and finish, the sedanette carries the additional features of upholstered foot cushions and artistic toilet and smoking sets.

Eddie Hearne Believes in Being His Own Demonstrator Every Time.

Not long ago the famous speed merchant cast his eagle eye over the Stephens Salient Six and found it good. But before he attached his signature to the well-known dotted line he requested permission to give the car a little try-out under his own supervision. Hearne took the Stephens sedanette out to the Beverly Hills Speedway. What he did there no one knows. But when he came back he firmly grasped the pen and ink and unhesitatingly affixed his "John Henry" down at the place where the reading matter ends.

SELDOM APPRECIATE OUR OWN HIGHWAYS.

BUT THE EASTERN VISITORS GET A REAL KICK OUT OF THESE PAVEMENTS.

No small part of the appeal Southern California has for the tourist is its up-to-date highway system, interviews with recent visitors from other sections of the United States reveal.

"The native Californian is so accustomed to the good roads connecting practically every point of scenic interest here that he really doesn't half appreciate them," declares F. E. Lewis of the Lewis-Hilliard company, McFarlan and Handley-Knight distributors. "But the visitor, often coming from a section where the roads are only passably good, nearly always remarks upon the splendid highways here.

"The fact that the State's most typical scenery can all be reached by motor with pleasant spins over hard surface highways possible between each point of special interest is one of the best advertisements of Southern California. Fortunately located in the center of this network of good roads it is natural that Los Angeles is favored by tourists as their headquarters during a few weeks' or months' visit."

MUST BURN LIGHTS ON LONGER JAUNTS.

"A certain motorist drove into our battery headquarters the other day," said A. J. Tobey of the Western Auto Electric Corporation, distributors for the Willard batteries, "and was considerably surprised when one of our experts informed him that his battery was overcharged and that it would be necessary for him to burn his lights even in the day time. The long trips he was making in his machine and the high charging rate of his generator meant certain destruction of his battery. An expert pointed out to this owner that burning his lights on these long trips would save his battery and that probably nothing else would.

"In that respect, at least, the European name, 'accumulator,' by which storage batteries are known over there is more literally correct. An automobile battery merely accumulates the surplus electricity developed by the generator and when that current becomes excessive, the work done in the battery (and it is just as much work for a battery to take a charge as it is to give it off) becomes a burden to it and overheating results.

"Most car owners know by this time that overheating means buckled plates, destruction of certain kinds of insulation materials commonly used and short circuits. Escape from this danger may be had by burning the headlights while on long day trips particularly when a recent test has shown the battery to be fully charged.

"The Willard Storage Battery Company strikes a timely note of warning in their latest booklet, entitled, "Willard Service; For Your Battery's Benefit—and Yours." They say never allow your battery to become overheated in service; keep all cells filled with distilled water. The battery will then take care of itself."

Hot Spot Type Manifold Gives Motor More Pep

"Practically all makes of cars are using a hot spot type of manifold, as it is really necessary in using the present-day, low-grade of fuel," says Hal Baker, sales manager of the Western Auto Supply Company, distributors of the hotspot manifold for Ford cars.

"The hotspot manifold is a proved success, having been developed by men of long experience in the development of high-grade cars, and has been produced by the experience of these men with the idea in mind of using low-grade gasoline.

"The hotspot manifold will do for your Ford car at a small cost what manufacturers of high-grade cars have spent large sums of money attempting to do.

"With the growing demand for gasoline and the falling off in the production of crude oil, there are only two solutions to the problem: First—make a lower grade of gasoline; second—use some arrangement that will enable the consumer to receive the greatest number of miles per gallon from this low-grade fuel.

"If your car is not equipped to do this, you should install a hotspot manifold. It is guaranteed to give you from 15 to 25 per cent more miles per gallon with greatly increased motor efficiency.

"The hotspot manifold is a one-piece gray iron casting that replaces the intake and exhaust pipes, and is so constructed that the intake is on the inside of the exhaust, bringing the incoming gas in direct contact with the hot intake walls heated by the exhaust, which completely vaporizes the fuel before entering the cylinders."

ORGANIZE IN APPEAL FOR NEW ROAD WORK.

WANT REDLANDS-BEAUMONT HIGHWAY PAVED; AND WITH SPEED AT THAT.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

REDLANDS, Oct. 22.—Commercial organizations of Redlands, Yucaipa, Beaumont and Banning are organizing in an appeal to the State Highway Commission to pave the road between Redlands and Beaumont, which is not now paved, and which was promised for this year. The road is paved in San Bernardino county to the Riverside county line, and last year it was graded and put in shape for paving by the State, as far as Beaumont.

The commission stated at that time that the road must set for a year before paving. Recently, however, Charles Whetmore, of the commission, in a talk here, stated that a decision had been made not to pave the stretch this year.

The commission will be asked to keep faith. San Bernardino county has a credit coming for some work done and the commission will be urged to use this in putting the road in good shape. It is becoming one of the main traveled roads of the interior.

WELL-KNOWN MOTOR CHIEFS JOIN LEACH.

Well known in western automobile circles and connected with the Pierce-Arrow and Marmon distributors for several years, Richard H. Magoon has joined the sales department of the Leach Biltwell Motor Car Company of Los Angeles. Mr. Magoon will actively assist Charles Hagenios, sales manager, and will have headquarters at the de luxe salesroom at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles.

T. A. Heinold, for a number of years assistant manager and purchasing agent of the Miller Engine and Foundry Works of Los Angeles, also has joined the Leach organization in the capacity of assistant purchasing agent. The Miller plant and organization were recently taken over by the Leach Company.

Both men are well known in Coast motor car circles and officials of the Leach company are elated over their accession. Mr. Heinold has offices at the Leach factory. Forrest P. Richardson, a director of the company and purchasing agent, recently was named assistant general manager of the company but will continue to head the purchasing department.

HERE'S A PROSPECT YOU HAVE TO SHOW.

CUT-AWAY CHASSIS DOESN'T LOOK GOOD TO THIS MAN AT ALL.

S. H. Thompson of the Perfecto two-speed axle organization tells a good one on himself. Thompson was at the recent Fresno District fair in charge of his company's exhibit there and was demonstrating with a cut-out Ford chassis equipped with the two-speed axle. One spectater looked for a long time; and listened to Thompson's talk on the merits of the Ruckstell Company's product. Then he announced that it never would work.

"What's that?" asked Thompson. "Did I understand you to say that this won't work?"

"You sure did, young feller! Anybody can see that. With all these holes in the thing, the oil will run out and it will fill up with mud and dirt."

When Thompson came to he carefully explained that the cut-out chassis was solely for exhibition purposes and was cut away so that the internal construction could readily be understood by the general public.

TROY DEALERS RALLY 'ROUND.

Hold Powwow With Officials of the Organization.

H. J. Coger Presides at the Big Gathering.

Nash Distributors Are Loud in Praise of Car.

Dealers representing the Troy Motor Sales Company throughout Southern California and Arizona assembled here Saturday, October 15, for their semiannual meeting with officials of the distributor organization. A few firms were unable to send representatives, but over a score were represented in the gathering.

Following a meeting in the service plant building, at which H. J. Coger, vice-president and general manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, presided, the meeting adjourned to the Wilshire Country Club, where a luncheon had been prepared and the visitors were given a chance to get acquainted with officials of the parent organization and with one another.

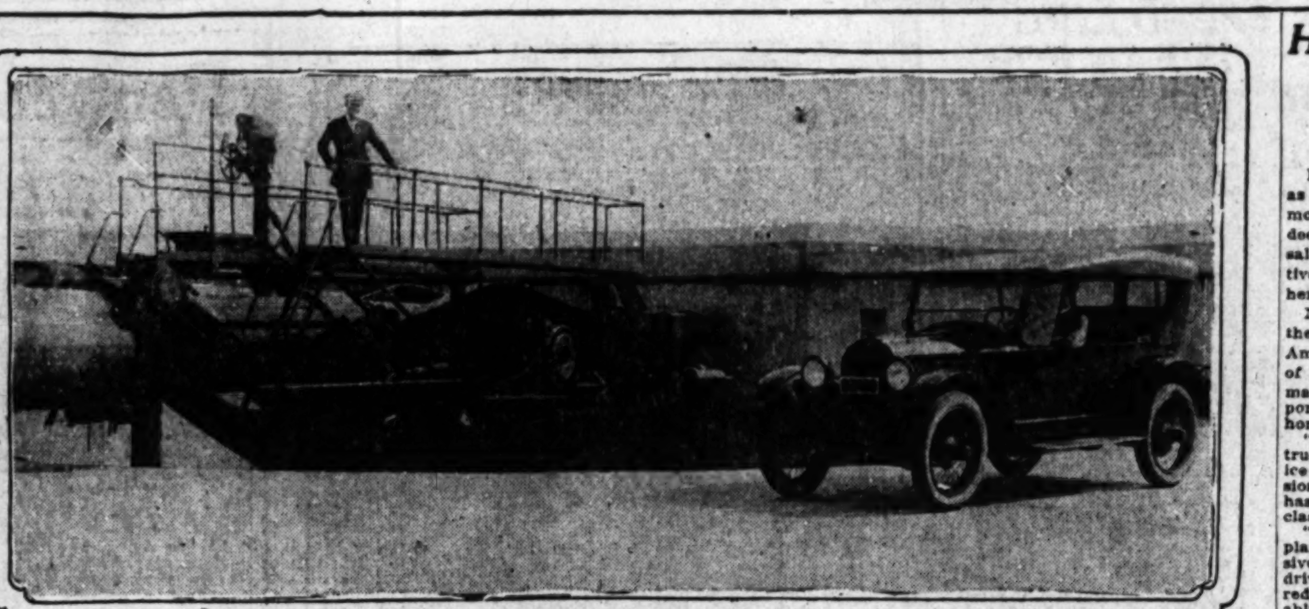
FEW SUGGESTIONS.

At the close of the luncheon, Mr. Coger addressed the gathering on Nash policies, made suggestions for the sales campaign during the next six months and asked for suggestions or criticism from those present. Without exception the dealers expressed themselves as more than satisfied with the way the Nash was performing in their respective territories and declared the only request they would have to make was for more cars.

Mr. Coger gave them figures on the Nash factory's production for the past twelve months, an outline on Mr. Nash's policies and plans for the future as gained through letters from Mr. John J. Troy, president of the firm which bears his name, and who has been with Mr. Nash at the Milwaukee and Kenosha factories for the past two months. He also stated that the Troy motor sales stood one of the highest in the United States on the sale of LaFayette cars, which are also distributed by the local firm and are manufactured by LaFayette Motors Company, of which Charles W. Nash is the head.

DEALERS' FAMILY.

In discussing the meeting Mr. Coger said: "Our Nash dealer organization has always been a sort of a family and we try to keep in just as close touch with each individual and his needs as if he actually were a member of our family. I feel that there is only one way to play fair with a dealer organization and that is to play square with them all the way. Our dealers, I believe, are all fully aware of the way we feel toward them and that we would rather lose a dozen retail sales ourselves here than to disappoint one of them to whom we had made a promise. The fact that we have built up the strong organization that we now posses undoubtedly is due to the fact that the dealers know we always play fair with them and that they can count on us to help them out if trouble ever comes."



Both of Them as Fine Pieces of Mechanism as Can be Turned Out Today.

Here's the latest thing in Willys-Knights beside one of the big guns at Fort MacArthur at Los Angeles Harbor. The motor car was driven to the fort with a load of ex-soldiers from that place and played a prominent part in a recent reunion.

SKID DEMON SOON HERE.

The season of slippery pavements is but a short distance away. Most every driver has a hatred of this season of the year. Consideration and preparation for the months in which skidding takes place should be made immediately.

"Skidding is caused by the lack of or loss of traction," said C. W. McKelvey, head of the McKelvey Motors Company, Liberty six distributors. "By throwing on the brakes of a sudden or stepping on the throttle with a bang, add to the danger of slipping.

"The average motorist fails to realize that as soon as his car starts skidding the front wheels should be turned into the direction which the car is sliding and not to the opposited direction. In order words, if the car starts skidding to the left, the driver should immediately turn to that direction.

"The distribution of weight and a car's balance has considerable to do with skidding. If both of these features are as they should be, where the equilibrium is evenly distributed as in a Liberty six, there is less danger of skidding.

"For the motorist who does much driving in wet weather a set of rules to help prevent skidding and which were compiled by the Automobile Club of Southern California should prove a great help. They are:

"Put your skid chains on at the first sign of wet weather. Watch for depressions in the street which look falsely shallow when filled with water. Do not straddle car tracks when driving on slippery streets. Your wheels are likely to jump. In wet weather apply your brakes with the clutch still in when you start to stop, thereby decreasing your chance of skidding. Do not put too much faith in your skid chains and think you can take any kind of a chance. When turning a corner or curve do not jam your throttle on too soon. Be sure that your brakes are equalized, with the same pressure on all points."

USED-CAR RECORD KEEPS GOING UP.

OVER A HUNDRED RENEWED JOBS ARE PUT OUT IN AS MANY DAYS.

The used-car department of the J. V. Baldwin Motor Company continues to establish new records for this firm in used-car sales. Distributors of the Columbia six and saxon-Duplex report 112 used cars sold and delivered in the past 100 days. This is an average of better than one car a day at a time when there has been much complaint as to the condition of the used-car business. The total value of the used cars sold has reached an amount considerably over $100,000.

J. V. Baldwin contributes much of the success of merchandising used cars to the fact that each one is thoroughly overhauled and placed in satisfactory running condition, and then refinished before being placed on sale. In addition to this, a service card issued with each used car assures the purchaser ample service in the Baldwin shops to take care of any minor adjustments which may have been overlooked.

The removal sale of used cars held in celebration of the Baldwin Motor Company locating in their new salesroom on Figueroa street at Twelfth, will be continued the balance of this month.

Liquid Juice Adds Bang to That Battery.

The Uradia Company of Houston, Tex., manufacturers of Uradia (liquid electricity) have opened a branch office and service station at 948 South Grand avenue, Los Angeles, under the name of California Uradia Sales Company.

According to Mr. J. C. Bailey, treasurer of the local company, Uradia will charge in five minutes any automobile storage battery, that can be charged on the electric line in one to three days, without heat, corrosion or excess acid action.

One of the many features of using Uradia is, that it saves the motorist time and worry, and adds life, strength and durability to his battery.

By the use of Uradia the process of forming is practically instantaneous as the battery simply becomes an accumulator and distributor for the recollection or reception of chemical and electrical energy. As soon as a charge of Uradia is poured into a battery and the terminals placed into a position of direct contact, discharge begins. A peculiar phenomena occurs, that is, without any electrolytic action upon the plates, there is immediately deposited upon the positive plates a film of compound similar to the usual deposit of lead peroxide, with the exception, that the particles are infinitely finer and more evently deposited in form of molecules. Development of sponge much finer and more porous than usual also begins upon the negative plate. This action is continuous and as long as Uradia is kept in the battery, there will be no appreciable deterioration of either plate, as there would be in ordinary electrolysis.

"Reports from railroads, iron and steel and textile industries indicating greater activity mean resumption of work in all lines, one of the important of which is transportation," says George Goodrum, manager of the Mission Motor Company, Dort distributor.

"Transportation as applied to commerce is not restricted to motor trucks which bear the burden. These highly efficient means of quick haulage must have an auxiliary, and this is what the automobile is in business. It is just as much a necessity as the commercial vehicle, which was made plain when everything was going along at top speed a couple of years ago.

"Some men who have used automobiles in business for years have tried different models, and today you will see more popular priced light fours engaged in this work than any other kind of cars. Reasons for this condition are plentiful. The four is handy, it does not take up a great deal of room and its service requirements are less than those of cars with a greater number of cylinders.

"Everywhere that the Dort is used as a business car it is proving a good investment. Averaging better than twenty miles to the gallon of gasoline it also features accessibility of working parts, so that adjustments are the matter of minutes and can be made by the owner, thereby saving both waste of time and money."

MEND PUNCTURES AS WELL AS SELL TIRES.

Determined to give their customers the benefit of a complete organization, Lute G. Gillelen and Company have established a tire service department in connection with their tire salesrooms.

"We realized from the first," says Mr. Gillelen, "that to attain the standards we had set for ourselves when we organized this firm we must be able to help our customers with their tire problems as well as sell them casings, tubes and accessories. But it was not until a few days ago that we were able to complete the necessary arrangements that would make this possible.

"Now, however, we have every facility for rendering a complete tire service."

PLAYS IMPORTANT PART IN REUNION.

WILLYS-KNIGHT HELPS WAR VETERANS TO STAGE GET-TOGETHER.

The automobile enters nearly every phase of present-day activities. A few days ago a reunion of the boys who saw duty at Fort MacArthur during the World War was held and a Willys-Knight played a most important role in making the huge gathering the success it was.

It was the first reunion of the boys who first served the country at Fort MacArthur and who later saw considerable service abroad. More than 300 ex-soldiers were present, while the gathering was augmented by the presence of Gov. W. D. Stephens, Mayor George Cryer, Sheriff William Traeger and Col. Hatch, commander of the post.

Following a banquet held at the Service Club which was arranged by Miss Helene Moore, hostess at the fort, election of officers took place. The officers elected are: President, Robert L. Hanley; first vice-president, Frank R. McReynolds, second vice-president, Casey Jones; third vice-president, Bru Nichols; secretary, Hugh Waddell, Jr.; treasurer, Phillip Dodson; historian, Bartle Harvey; sergeant-at-arms, W. C. Weber; director of publicity, Harold H. Scott.

BATTERIES HAVE TO WORK THESE MONTHS.

Late fall and winter months are the real working periods of the year for the battery, declared J. W. Gaffney, head of the Gaffney Motor Sales Company, distributors of the Du Pont four.

"The battery of every automobile will, from now until next April, be taxed to the utmost, due to the shorter days," states Mr. Gaffney, "and more attention should be accorded it. In addition, it is said that the average life of a battery is fifteen months. But why not increase its longevity?

"It is a fact that the average automobile owner either does not think he needs to thoroughly understand his car or else he is indifferent to the effect that neglect or abuse of its mechanism has on his purse. It is obvious that the liquid with which the battery cells are filled in the course of time will suffer evaporation. This is doubly so because the chemical action of the battery produces a certain amount of heat, which hastens losses due to the inevitable evaporation. To make up for this and keep the liquid up to the proper level, distilled water must be added at regular intervals, once a week in warm weather and once in two weeks during the cold season. Filtered water may be bought at any drug store or garage.

"When the liquid has been reduced by evaporation, its acid content is just the same and all that is necessary to bring it up to the proper level is adding the plain water. On the other hand, if any of the liquid has been spilled or has leaked out of the jars in any way, acid has also been lost, so that in replenishing it it will be necessary to add acid and water in proper amounts, that is to say, with a specific gravity of 1.30."

CAR MUST BE LIGHT FOR JAPANESE ROADS.

When Charles B. Warren, lately appointed ambassador to Japan, opened negotiations for the embassy's motor equipment, he found unexpected difficulties in his way. Automobile men with export experience told him that a limousine of a standard American make would not do. For Tokyo's streets are narrow and her many bridges are of light bamboo, amply strong to carry the lighter burdens that make up the traffic of the little men of Nippon, but never intended to carry a big American car and its burden of seven full-sized white men.

Col. Warren will use an American car, a Paige 6-44. The chassis is Pacific. But the body will be already well on its way across the Pacific. But the body will be Tokyo-built of a size and weight to come within the requirements of Japan's traffic regulations.

WAGING REAL WAR AGAINST FRICTION.

"Every day the automobile wages a little private war all of its own—a war against friction. Motorists can win this fight by the use of an I. & M. GreesGun, which is a necessary weapon of motorists in their battle against car depreciation," says Albert Klems, the inventor of the I. & M. GreesGun.

"For the lubrication of various parts of the car, grease cups are out of date. They were the best that was offered several years ago. But grease cups are not positive lubrication. The only power behind the pressure of a grease cup is the finger leverage which is not over twenty-five pounds per square inch. Besides, it is a rather slow and tiresome process.

"The modern method of preventing friction is the nipple, into which grease or oil is forced by a grease gun. This is absolute positive lubrication."

Horses Are on Downgrade in Hawaii Today.

In far-away Hawaii the horse is as rapidly being replaced by the motor car and truck as in the States, declares E. E. Caister, manager of sales for the Standard Steel Automotive Products Company, distributors here for the Standard Eight.

Not long ago a touring party from the Hawaiian Islands visited here. Among them was an acquaintance of Mr. Caister's, who told of the remarkable progress of motor transportation in the islands and how the horse has practically been displaced.

"Thousands of passenger cars, trucks and tractors are now in service in Uncle Sam's Pacific possessions," stated Caister, "and the horse has been relegated to the 'has been' class forever, it seems.

"On the big sugar and pineapple plantations the work is almost exclusively done by tractors and motor-driven plows. This innovation has reduced operating expenses considerably, at the same time accomplishing increased and more satisfactory work. Several of the plantations are now manufacturing their own motor fuel.

"Splendid automobile roads lead to every point of interest in the islands, even up to within a few hundred yards of the rim of the active volcano of Kilauea, in the Island of Hawaii. The Territory is spending millions yearly on its roads, and one of the largest building programs in its history is being carried out, for which the advent of the automobile is largely responsible."

NEW RADIATOR CAP HAS ADVANTAGES.

"An attractive and useful addition to the car is the new Stewart cross-bar radiator cap," says Harry Ungar, manager of the Stewart Products Service Station.

"The cross-bar of this radiator cap makes it possible to obtain a leverage when loosening the cap. When installed on the radiator of a car, it greatly adds to the appearance of the machine.

"The Stewart cross-bar radiator cap is finished with a highly polished nickel-plating. The aluminum base will not corrode and stick in the top of the radiator, as does the usual radiator cap, which is made of steel and often rusts tight to the threads of the radiator," concluded Mr. Ungar.

HUDSON
Super-Six

An Advantage That 6 Years of Sales Leadership Gives You

Six years the largest selling fine car in the world is impressive evidence of the way Hudson, from the outset, has held supremacy as the value leader of its field.

Even at $3170, it outsold all other fine cars.

Were its position less deserved, surely six years would have discovered a rightful successor.

Yet today Hudson's price differential is vastly more advantageous than ever before. To its already substantial price advantage has been added a new and important low cost factor.

For today's price of $2280 at Los Angeles is based upon the lower production costs and materials market of today.

Just Compare Prices Now

That is the chief reason Hudson now undersells many cars that were formerly below it in price. That is why it has improved its price advantage over higher-priced cars to such figures that the motor car trade has marvelled.

And consider that many Super-Sixes are today rendering smooth, dependable duty after more than 100,000 miles of service.

Can any car within its new price range claim like consideration upon the basis of comparative proofs?

Mr. Jesse Smith, Ford dealer of Glendale, "has one" on the speed cops of that city. The traffic was blocked so badly recently that the police had to call the people off the streets—the crowd was watching Mr. Smith riding around on a rubber-tired tractor. He had been demonstrating the tractor to a prospective buyer, but all Glendale thought it was a new machine made to order for Mr. Smith and most of them were crowding close to see where the awful barking was coming from. Several speed cops were sent out after him, so he could not go as fast as he would otherwise.

Atterbury-Kemper Company report that business with them has been exceptionally good in closed cars—more than three-fourths of their sales the past week has been in this type of car. Mr. Kemper says that if purchasers do not get their orders in early, they are taking chances of having to wait for their cars, as he fears they will run low on closed car models.

Caddell Motor Company, Ford dealers, Eagle Rock, report a big sale of trucks the past week, also the sale of a tractor for crushing rock for road building. This firm sold a tractor to the city of Pasadena which has now been in operation for ten months, and so far there has not been a repair of any kind made on the machine.

The Ford bowling team of the J. E. Coberly Company won the honors from the National Hardwood Company team Monday night, knocking down the pins strong. Mr. Coberly also reports the salesmen are equally strong knocking down sales this month—having delivered sixty cars the first fifteen days.

W. I. Tupman Company, Ford dealers, reports the sale of a tractor to a local lumber company, and has other sales in view, as the large business corporations are beginning to see the great saving, as well as the great pulling power of the Fordson tractor. Many tractors have been sold this week for both commercial work and farming.

Mr. W. D. Hubbard, of the Hubbard Auto Sales Company, has been visiting in the East in the interests of the company. Mr. Hubbard spent several weeks at the Ford plant in Detroit and is visiting all large eastern city Ford dealers, to get, if possible, any new ideas for conducting Ford service.

Mr. Marshall Collins, general manager for the Oliver Chilled Plow Works of South Bend, Ind., has been visiting in Los Angeles territory this week, and is out among the dealers getting first-hand information on the plow and implement market in Southern California. The Oliver Plow Company not only manufacture a complete line of plows for the Fordson tractor, but also distributes a full line of seeding machines, hay balers, disc harrows, threshing machines and silage cutters, for use in connection with the versatile Fordson.

Can't Tell Him Business Isn't Stepping Along

You can't tell Ralph Hamlin business is poor these days, because he knows different. The way Franklins have been selling lately has been a shock to motor row and a sweet surprise for the veteran distributor.

In August Hamlin's organization came within one car of winning the capital prize offered by the Franklin factory for the largest number of sales in that month, being nosed out by Boston. In September the Los Angeles house again tore ahead through the field of entries, being bunched at the finish with Chicago and New York. But New York squeaked through with the extra car and left Los Angeles and Chicago hanging on to each other.

However, Hamlin's sales record has been most consistent and constantly bettering the same months of a year ago, which is a condition many a dealer envies. When asked the particular reason for this excellent showing, Hamlin pondered a moment and then said: "It's rather hard to determine. Of course, business conditions have been improving, but, as I recently stated, the day of the air-cooled motor is at hand and I believe the wonderful sales showing is simply due to the fact that motorists are finding out that the Franklin is just what we claim it is—an economical, comfortable and durable motor car."

TRUCK DEALER GETS IDEAS FROM USERS.

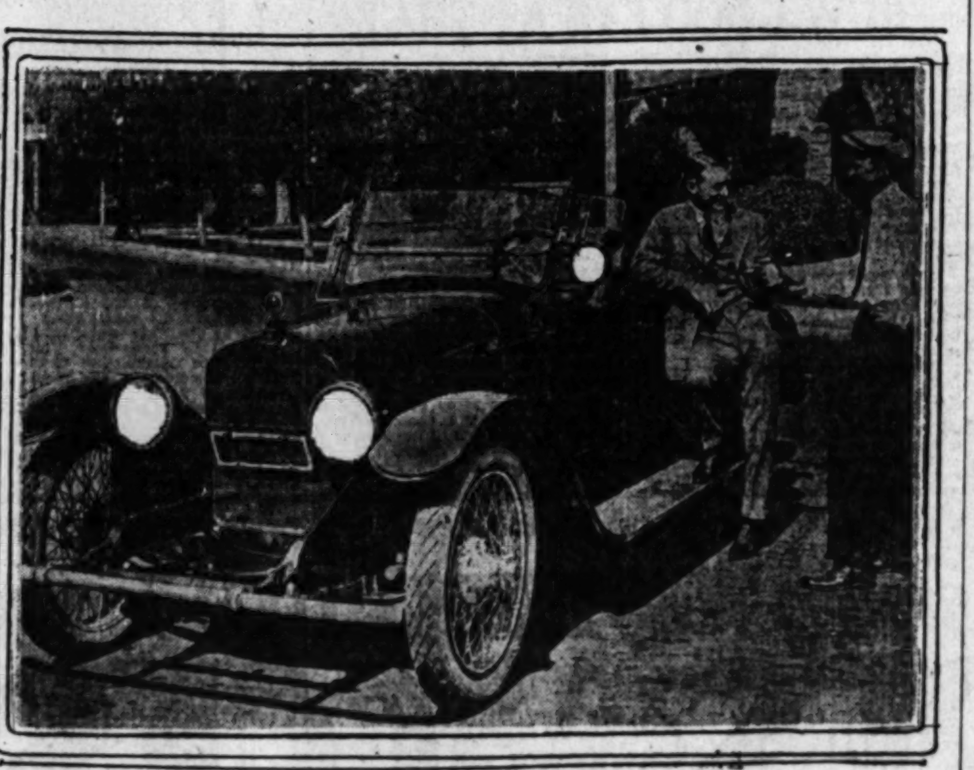
POINT OF VIEW OF OWNER VERY IMPORTANT TO MANUFACTURERS.

"Getting down to absolute facts, who knows most about the practical accomplishments of the modern motor truck? The user, doesn't he. Therefore, it is of vital importance that we always get the users' point of view," states J. Jerome Canavan, Pacific Coast distributor for Walker electric trucks.

"Motor trucks are sold on comparison with other trucks, and horses. Motor truck manufacturers have stopped talking about the competition of the horse, because it is generally admitted that the horse has been outclassed.

"On short hauls, the Walker balanced drive electric truck has outclassed them all.

"Actual operating cost and investment figures of large and experienced users of Walker trucks have warranted the officials of our organization in adopting as our slogan, 'World's lowest truck cost,' said Mr. Canavan.



Templar Cars Hitting Fancy Paces in Australia at Present.

Here we have T. B. Higgins, well-known clubman and sportsman, and Leland S. Foulke of the Boulevard Motors Corporation gathered around Higgins's new Templar sportette. Higgins is a Templar booster of the first water and recently received some interesting dope on this car's performance in Australian contests. Australia used to be Higgins's postoffice address before he moved to Southern California.

MAKES HIT IN AUSTRALIA.

The Templar has been proclaimed the wonder car by papers of Australia as a result of the last annual gruelling 1000-mile test held there, is the information received by T. B. Higgins, well-known clubman and sportsman, and who is a Templar owner and also a Templar booster of the first water. Higgins recently returned from a tour to Tahoe and the Yosemite in his Templar sportette, which to date he has driven close to 20,000 miles. Incidentally T. B. is a brother of Pat Higgins.

The Australian event is held over a course 1000 miles in length, between Sydney and Brisbane, with economy, speed, power and reliability as the deciding factors. There are demerits for any adjustments. The old Phoenix road race course is a boulevard when compared with that for the Australian event, Higgins told Leland S. Foulke, head of the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Templar distributors for Southern California.

In a large field of entries, including well-known European and American cars, a Templar roadster, just unloaded and without any preparation, finished second and at the tap, the Templar's front wheels were but a few feet from the rear wheels of the winner, a Vauxhall, one of the highest priced French creations. According to the Australian papers, no adjustments were made on the Templar and its gasoline or petrol average was better than twenty miles to the gallon. In view of the fact that petrol sells for $1 a gallon in Australia, the car's high economy average scored a tremendous hit with the motoring public there.

Large Buyers Demand Value in All Tires.

The individual who does the buying of automotive equipment for corporations employing fleets of automobiles, is of necessity a keen judge of tire values, for this one item of expense runs into a considerable figure in a year's time, according to the number of cars in use, said Warner L. Hamlen, manager of the tire division of Don Lee.

"Tires on cars used by corporations, particularly those in the light delivery business, are often subjected to so much misuse and hard treatment, that the item of tire expense is one that causes many a buyer to scratch his head in an effort to reduce it and at the same time give the utmost service," he said.

"Since Don Lee took over the exclusive distribution of Henderson giant cord and fabric tires in California, the attractive figures at which they are being offered the public, has aroused a great deal of interest among those corporations employing automobiles and light delivery, trucks. As the middleman's profit has been eliminated in our selling plan, it is obvious that a considerable saving can be effected according to the amount of equipment in use. The cords are guaranteed for 8000 miles and the fabrics for 6000 and 7500 miles. Any necessary adjustments are made direct at the several Don Lee branches. While we are still short on a certain number of smaller sizes, this will be obviated in a few days upon the receipt of another shipment that is being rushed from the factory."

LEACH TO SHINE IN BIG EXHIBIT.

ARRANGE TO SHOW CALIFORNIA CAR IN NEW YORK AND CHICAGO.

That California will be well represented at the big Eastern automobile shows this winter was assured this week when the Leach Biltwell Motor Car Company of Los Angeles closed contracts for exhibition space at the Chicago and New York shows. R. A. Wilson, production manager of the company, who now is touring the Eastern centers, and E. L. Harrison, Eastern representative, closed the negotiations with the show officials.

At least three of the 1922 models of the Leach power plus six will be displayed, all containing the new motor that is creating such attention in the motor world. The cars now are being prepared for the shows and probably will be sent by express to the New York fete, which opens first, early in January. When the Gotham show closes, the cars will be taken to Chicago and may also be exhibited elsewhere. The company was able to obtain a very favorable location in the show buildings.

M. A. Leach, president of the Leach company, will be in personal charge of the exhibits at both shows. He also will take charge of the awarding of distributors' contracts for 1922 and expects to establish agencies in every city of importance in every State, as well as establishing foreign connections.

DURANT CAR GETS WARM RECEPTION.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

FLINT, Oct. 22.—The new Durant four-cylinder car, driven to Michigan from the Long Island city plant in the East, is here on exhibition. It is in charge of W. R. Willett, a former Flint man, now attached to the Durant factory staff. On the drive west, residents of Findlay, O., where the axles for the car are made, turned out with a brass band and gave Mr. Durant's latest creation a welcome.

THINKS "TIME-SAVER" WOULD BE GOOD NAME.

Harry W. Harrison, he of Westinghouse battery fame, is thinking of coining a new slogan for "battery service headquarters."

Mr. Harrison thinks that "the time saver" would be a very appropriate name, as he claims almost every motorist who drives in for battery, starting and lighting, ignition or carburetion service, can save anywhere from fifteen to forty-five minutes by patronizing "battery service headquarters." Its convenience of location—two short blocks from Seventh street, and within a few minutes of almost any downtown store or office, enables this big saving of time, with the added convenience to the motorist of being able to secure all of his service at one place.

T. A. Guild, sales manager, and S. S. Graham, treasurer of the Westinghouse Union Battery Company, who have been in Los Angeles during the past week, on a tour of inspection, have expressed themselves in glowing terms over the local Westinghouse battery service station, which they claim is one of the best-planned and equipped in the country today.

FILLING GREASE CUPS A MESSY OCCUPATION.

"Most every motorist takes good care to keep the tires of his car correctly inflated," said C. A. Roesch, manager of the California Lubricator Company. "He is watchful to maintain the water level in his radiator," continued Roesch, "and he is methodical in his habits of replenishing the oil in the crank case. He keeps the fuel tank filled.

"But if you question forty car owners regarding the lubrication of the other twenty-four to forty-five bearings, scarcely five out of the forty can possibly vouch for the effectiveness of their lubrication system.

"The reason is that neither grease nor oil-cup methods are positive; that they are so mussy and ineffectual that many car owners neglect lubrication rather than muss with cups and dabble with grease."

TEN STATES PLACE TAX ON GASOLINE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Ten State legislatures have imposed a tax on gasoline during the current year. They are Arkansas, Arizona, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Montana, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Dakota and Washington.

Prior to this year Colorado, Kentucky, New Mexico and Oregon had levied such a tax. The State of Louisiana has written such a measure into its constitution.

TRAP GUN AND ROD

BY TOM MARSHALL

[This is the hundred and sixth of a series of articles dealing with trapshooting, hunting and fishing by Capt. Tom Marshall, a noted authority on the great out-of-doors.]

Where millionaires hobnob with feathered aces of the air. Crane Lake is located four miles northeast of Browning, Ill., near the mouth of the Sangamon, at its confluence with the Illinois River. Crane Lake is two miles long, averaging about a half-mile in width. Fed by springs from the bottom water is ever cold. Forests of fine oak trees skirt the shores and adjacent ridges, bearing masts, which have proven most seductive to migratory birds. Crane Lake was at one time the property of Powers Brothers of Decatur, Ill. The lake was later transferred to a syndicate, who have followed the policies of game conservation and protection originally adopted at Crane Lake Sanctuary.

As a house guest of Powers Brothers, prior to the sale of the land, I carefully studied the policies, which not only protect and perpetuate game on privae preserves, but conserve it for the nation at large. Crane Lake, as above described, is a veritable duck sanctuary. Not a shot has been fired on this lake for years. Ducks and geese aggregate there from every section, driven in by incessant outside shooting and attracted by their intuitive duck knowledge of absolute safety.

They usually arrive at great height, reaching a point directly over Crane Lake, they volplane down in funnel shape, darting and twisting as they near the water. Eliminating circling, they immediately alight, which ducks never do, unless confident of safety, in their own minds. This is also an evidence of "home-coming ducks." Strange migrating or uninitiated birds always circle the lake, settling on the water about the third excursion around. Flocks frequently arrive, apparently directed and guided by the head of the family, who had visited there before and was piloting in the recent brood.

They were coming from the north, at a double safety height. When the head of the lake was reached, their wings were set and they volplaned and coasted down with the velocity of a bullet. Settling on the water without a circle of investigation, indicative of former acquaintance with surrounding environment. Strangers arriving could be distinguished by their flight and action, attracted by thousands of birds splashing, calling and playing in the lake.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon grub call would be sounded, birds would then take wing headed for the fields of grain, in perfect formation, but intermittent periods. It required about an hour for the "campers" to all depart. Before a storm, wonderful flights of ducks and geese were always seen dashing for the lake. In the judgment of Chan Powers, authority on "duck-ology," those birds were conversant with and took advantage of the safety and protection extended them in Crane Lake. A strict code of shooting rules always prevailed about Crane Lake, which governed the balance of the preserve, where shooting was permitted, at a distance from the sanctuary lake.

Lying on the north shore of Snicarte Slough, a bayou off Illinois River, was their wonderfully outfitted house boat, equipped with every modern accessory and convenience. A stateroom fitted with brass beds, closets and sideboards, was assigned to every member of our party. A circular table in the reception room, covered with green baize cloth, was devoted to old maid, dominoes, fudge or some other game equally as interesting. The chef specialized on serving those winged messengers in every known and acceptable style. When birds were first arriving from the north, no shooting was permitted as weather temperature for keeping birds was not right.

No birds were killed during warm weather when they could not be preserved. Neither was there more birds killed than waiting personal friends (whose only chance for a duck dinner was the generosity of their nimrod friends) could utilize. Hours for shooting were between 9 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon. No person left the houseboat before 9, leaving the birds undisturbed prior to that hour. All were scheduled for a return to the boat at 3. Hence the ducks were undisturbed when they returned to their roosting grounds in Crane Lake.

Private clubs handled on the lines of Duck Island or Crane Lake clubs are of vast benefit to the shooting fraternity at large. Sanctuary Lakes are the only havens of rest for burnt-out birds, driven from the outside or public shooting grounds, which knows no conservation. Both government and States have insufficient territory where birds are protected and can find rest during the time of their migratory flight or incubation. Attention should be given by State authorities to the home life and protection of migratory birds that are disposed to remain and breed within their immediate territory.

AMONG THE FANS.

J. Brown is back in the city after a six months' stay in the country.

Mr. Stone, one of the strong Iowa players, is here to spend the winter.

Joe Reyburn is again located on his ranch near Upland.

With the next issue, due to arrive this week, the A. C. M. completes its first year. The old subscribers should renew their subscriptions at once, all other players should get their name on the subscription list p.d.q. Write to the publisher, M. D. Tetzel, Wichita, Kan.

Hugh McKean has purchased property in Wichita, Kan., with the expectation of making that city his home.

The Old Fourteenth game in this issue by W. C. Belden of Cucamonga, Cal., should be very interesting to those interested in that line. Mr. Belden has taken little part in checkers for several years, but as an analyst he does not have to take a back seat to any player in the world.

LOS ANGELES TIMES GAME, NO. 2001.

Old Fourteenth, by W. C. Belden.

In contributing the following analysis, W. C. Belden writes: "I am sending you some play, which I believe to be sound, on that old Fourteenth game recently published by Heffner. I think after fifteen years of analysis that the true result of the 15-18 move should be discovered. The only claim I make for the play I am sending you is that it corrects Heffner's play for a draw, as published in Times game No. 1072." (The game should have been numbered 1172.)

LOS ANGELES TIMES GAME, NO. 2002.

Aryshire Lassie.

I spent Saturday and Sunday last week at the Reyburn ranch in Upland. Joe and I had played checkers rather late on Saturday night, so Sunday morning found us still "in the land of nod" long after our wives were out doing the chores. Joe finally woke up about 8:30 and, hearing me stirring in the next room, challenged me for a blindfold game. Here is the result:

Black—Reyburn.			White—Dougherty.

a—At this point I was sorry I had left my pocket board at home, but this seemed the only move left.

b—At this stage Joe's wife went in to call him for breakfast. I heard something fall and a lot of noise like checkers rolling on the floor. After a brief silence Joe good-naturedly called out: "The game is called on account of darkness, I never could reset the men."

c—The rest of the game is given as a likely continuation.

This game was the fourth game of the first Pomeroy vs. Jordan match and is taken from an old file of the San Francisco Post. The notes are by Hopewell, who was editing the Post column.

a—Forms the opening, which is only occasionally played in this day of the two-move restriction, but which was the favorite opening of many of the famous players whose names are household words.

b—Probably the safest defense.

c—The late C. F. Barker originated the famous "30-26 defense" here, with which he was quite successful. The move was not a new one, but Barker's continuation was.

d—There are several ways of playing here; all good.

e—11-15 is the natural move; it has been played in the past and is met by either 27-24 or 32-28.

f—A very old line and does not seem to have been practiced much.

g—Barker's "American Checker Player" gave 27-24, but the text move is better.

h—W. R. Barker went 18-15 against R. D. Yates, drawing.

i—Note the elegance of Jordan's play for the draw from this stage. He probably was familiar with the formation.

j—With a man up Pomeroy's position was full of promise, but a promise means nothing to Jordan unless it is kept.

k—After the game Pomeroy was asked why he did not keep on after the man. His reply was: 28-24, 14-5, 24-19; easy draw.

l—Some class to this move.

m—If Black fails to move the king, then White draws at once by 9-6, 10-1, 24-19.

n—Time of game, one hour and a half.

SHOW GOOD EYE AT THAT.

To be held up and have his demonstrator taken away from him was hard enough, but when the bandits took all his surplus cash and with it his overcoat and gloves, A. L. Peterson, salesman with the Thomason Motor Car Company, Southern California and Arizona distributors for the Scripps-Booth, is of the opinion that they are not in the class sometimes known as "gentlemen of the road."

However, he is also as firm in his opinion that they have a very keen knowledge of motor-car values, when they selected a new 1922 Scripps-Booth touring car as their prize.

Peterson was on his way home from the Santa Monica Bay district last Friday night, driving along Pico Boulevard. At about 11 o'clock, when nearing the end of the car line, a Ford drew up beside him and a man on the running board, sticking a gun against his face, told him to stop. Peterson said that gun looked like the biggest piece of artillery he had ever seen or read of, so he decided to comply.

Ordered to get out of his car, one man—tall and wearing colored glasses—stuck a gun against his stomach, and still another, a small chap with a handkerchief over his face, placed another gun against his back. He was searched and then told to leave his overcoat and gloves in the new Scripps-Booth, and with his hands above his head, be on his way. One of the duet then entered the car he had been driving and the other climbed back into the Ford, and they drove from sight. Peterson informed the police as soon as he could reach a telephone.

"When a car is so popular that road agents want it in their business, it looks as though we'll have to keep them in at night," declared D. H. Thomason, head of the concern that bears his name.

NEW EXECUTIVES IN COLE ORGANIZATION.

J. H. McDuffee, who has recently become first assistant to the head of the Cole Motor Car Company, announced yesterday that Homer McKee, formerly in charge of Cole sales and advertising, has been appointed advertising counsel to the Cole organization and will handle Cole advertising through the Homer McKee Advertising Company of Indianapolis.

Simultaneously the appointment of Charles S. Crawford, formerly chief engineer of the Cole Motor Car Company, as engineering consultant to the Cole organization, is announced by J. J. Cole, president of the Cole Motor Car Company. This, on the heels of the recent acquisition of J. H. McDuffee as assistant general manager of the Cole company is generally accepted as meaning that, in the opinion of J. J. Cole, the moment has finally arrived for a resumption of vigorous and energetic business policies.

SENDS DISTRESS SIG

Many automobiles are sending out radio waves, unheeded "SOS" messages, while they are being electrocuted just as surely and with the same degree of certainty that the electric chair in Sing Sing does its work. The result is expensive repairs and replacements in addition to expensive gasoline consumption.

More than 600 cars in Los Angeles have been saved from electrocution, and thousands have wondered at the pep of various types of cars in hill climbing, or pick-up, or marvelously low idling. It is simply putting the ignition system into balance. World famous ignition engineers have tackled the problem for years, and now it has been solved. It is a secondary condensor with a minimum loss that will carry through the range of changing resistance from idling to high speed work.

Vico Oscillator, made in Los Angeles, is the device. It prevents radiated

A POPULAR BOOTH AT RIVERSIDE'S FAIR.

RIVERSIDE FAIR STOCK CHAMPIONS.

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.

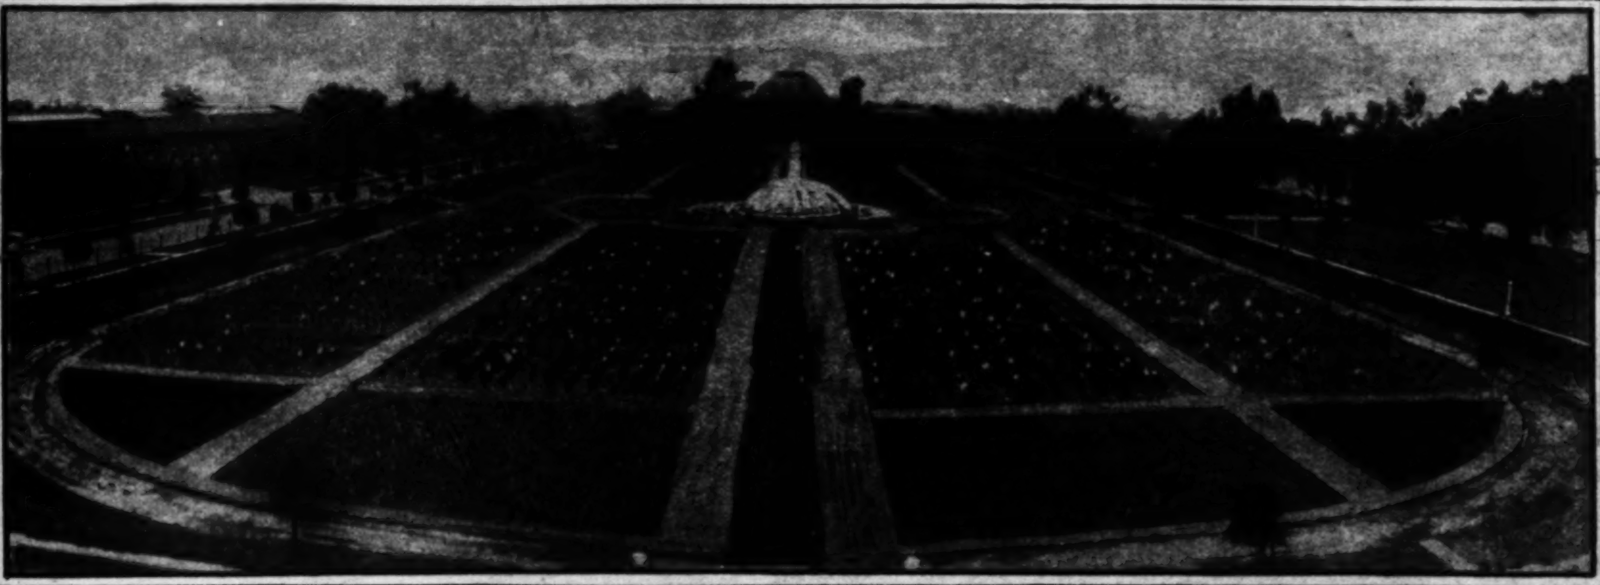
Floral "rug" in Exposition Park sunken gardens.

THE flower show and plant exhibition which opened Thursday, October 20, at Exposition Park, Los Angeles, to continue over the 26th, is the largest, finest and costliest ever staged west of Chicago. It covers at least ten times the area of any previous show in the same territory and has on exhibition a thousand times as many blossoms. Seven solid acres of flowers in the sunken garden, a tented field 130x250 feet for indoor flowers, and another, 130x280 feet, for the trade exhibits—this tells the story of the magnitude of the Exposition Park show.

Every horticultural industry of the State and every part of the State has its place, from roses and avocados of coastal regions to date palms and their fruits from the Coachella and Imperial valleys. San Francisco, Oakland, San Jose and northern points have sent carloads of material. The Pasadena Horticultural Society has merged its flower show with the big show, and the California Avocado Association is holding its exhibit and convention at Exposition Park. The California Farmers' and Fruit Growers' convention, and those of minor organizations are being held here. It is the greatest come-together meeting of horticultural interests and materials ever brought about in the Great West, and the educative and spectacular displays are attracting more visitors than ever before were lured to see California's best and brightest in plants and flowers. He who fails to attend may never have a chance to see its like again.

The Taxless Town.

Not only does the town of Orson, Sweden, impose no taxes, but there is no charge for telephone service, schools, libraries, or the use of the city railway. All this is due to the wisdom of a former generation who planted trees on the available ground, with the result that during the past thirty years the town authorities have sold $5,000,000 worth of young trees and timber, while judicious replantings have provided for a similar income in the future. Mourmalon, France, goes still further. The communal lands provide enough timber to allow each person a small annuity.



General view of sunken gardens of Exposition Park, scene of great outdoor section of California Flower Show.

Fremontia Mexicana.

Few of our people know the native Fremontia Californica, though it is a desirable shrub for the garden. Lately there has been found a new species in Lower California with larger flowers and leaves, the color of the flowers being darker, almost orange instead of the buff of the better known species. It is of better garden value than Fremontia Californica. Both species do well in the hottest and driest situations.

Plant Wood Lots.

Every suburbanite at times is seriously in need of timber, and it costs both time and money to run to a lumber yard, and often a good pole or log would serve the purpose far better than sawn timbers. To be sure, times have changed. Auto trucks have nearly removed the need for hastily improvised poles or tongues and reaches. Electric, gasoline and steam power have made horse-power sweeps unnecessary; but a load of loose hay needs a binding pole, no matter what power propels the vehicle. Fence posts will always be in demand, and if steel or concrete posts become common it will be because they are cheaper than wooden ones, and better uses will be found for wood. While the woodlot is growing it will provide shade and shelter for live stock, or even for the family—perhaps neighbors and friends. A good woodlot provides a fine picnic ground for all who come, and in ever so many ways, even as a landscape feature, the woodlot is a blessing. It matters not what trees you use, whether eucalyptus, sycamore, locust, catalpa, cottonwood, or what, the woodlot will be useful and ornamental.

Irrigation of Vegetables.

Potatoes, tomatoes, beans, peas, and all vines like melons, squashes, cucumbers and cantaloupes, should never be watered by sprinkling, or in any way wetting the vines; while radishes, onions, lettuce, turnips, beets, carrots, cabbage, cauliflower, and plants of this class are better so watered. You are not likely to water them too much and they will quickly show neglect in this respect. The water may be run between the rows and if the supply is plentiful enough they will answer every purpose; and this method, of course, must be used with the first class mentioned. In making the furrows, run them in such direction that the water will not run too fast, so it may soak into the ground as thoroughly as possible. Root crops, particularly potatoes, are better for deep, thorough irrigations at a considerable distance apart. If the potato ground is soaked two feet deep when planting, and again two feet deep when the tubers are half grown, no other irrigation will be required on most soils. Plants with large tops will need more frequent irrigation because the roots do not go so deeply and the soil near the surface must be kept damp. A mulch of any substance that will keep the surface from drying quickly is of great assistance in retaining moisture, thus saving irrigation and will usually repay its cost of labor and expense. Unless well mulched, the surface of the ground should be well loosened as soon as sufficiently dry after each irrigation. This loose soil forms a mulch on the surface, which in a measure prevents evaporation.

A flower bed in the Exposition Park gardens.

The Oldest Tree.

According to Dr. Von Shrenk, the oldest living tree in the world is the Santa Maria del Tale cypress in Southern Mexico, believed by experts to be between 5000 and 6000 years old. He took measurements in 1903, a century after Humboldt discovered it on his famous tour, but could not get the consent of the Mayor of Santa Maria del Tale to bore out a half-inch plug to the center of the trunk, where there was a girth of 126 feet at four feet from the ground. Prof. Asa Gray estimated its age at 5124 years, and Prof. Alphonse de Candolle at 6000.

The Pawpaws.

There are about twenty species of pawpaws, all native to the American tropics. At least three of these species are hardy in Southern California, and some of the fruits grown in local gardens are declared to have been luscious. The most common species is Carica papaya, one of the most popular fruits in the tropics, where a tree sometimes bears as many as fifty fruits, the largest being a foot in length and weighing fifteen pounds. Their flavor has been likened to that of the best cantaloupes, and the flesh is similar in color and general appearance, being yellow or salmon pink. The green fruits are also cooked and used as a vegetable, so would prove of some value in California even where they would not ripen. The leaves if cooked with tough meat will render it tender, by reason of the digestive principle contained in them. This is known as papain and is present in all parts of the plant. It is extracted from the fruit just as crude opium is from the pods of the poppy, by slashing the fruit and collecting the congealed, milky juice. By reason of the presence of papain, large quantities of the fruit may be eaten without danger, and it aids in the digestion of other food.

Massing Palms.

Nearly all palms grow naturally in clumps and masses, as do almost all plants and trees. They do not grow singly and in pairs as we are wont to plant them. They would look much better if planted thickly, but not too thick. Though stately in form, and lending themselves admirably to architectural effects, they still appear at their best only when planted in numbers, in a purely informal disposition. The individual should be lost sight of and regarded as only so much material with which to build the picture—merely a brick in the wall.

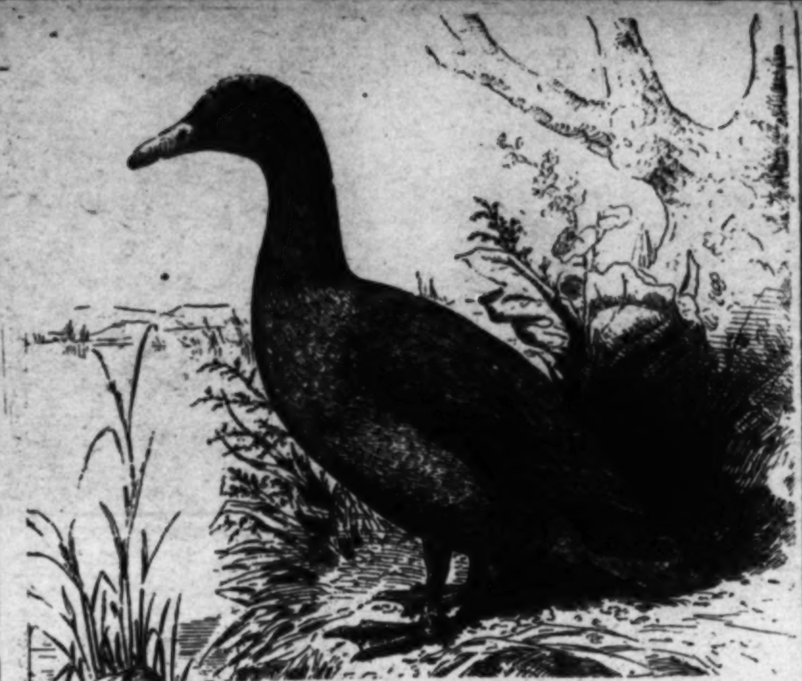
Some Observations on Chicken Feathers.

THEIR CONSTRUCTION, FUNCTION AND SIGNIFICANCE. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.



Buff Orpington drake.

IT IS at times surprising as well as amusing to note the opinions and conclusions that some people hold on the functions of molting or shedding of feathers in bird life. Though a natural process, there is always a mercenary disposition to avoid it as much as possible, hence there are advocated so-called "systems" that will shorten the period of its operation to accelerate a return of normal production of hen fruit in paying quantities. The idea is somewhat lost sight of that bird clothes will wear out and that new ones must be supplied in much the same way that fur-bearing animals shed their hair only to make way for a new coat. But in either case the discarded clothes are not only worn out but dead, and as such fall away from the body to be replaced by live ones. During this process domesticated fowl and animals demand some special attention from their caretakers, more to insure a robust physical condition while being refurbished rather than to unduly force the process. To starve fowl for a period and then feed heavily to accelerate the growth of new plumage may shorten the molting period, but it also brings about radical changes in the system which are not always for the best. In this connection it may not be amiss to call attention to the peculiar character of feathers and how the process of reproduction really takes place.

To borrow the vernacular of the plantsman, feathers might be called hardy annuals. To be sure they are not planted, neither are they grown from seed or cuttings, still they require a certain amount of cultivattion. Abnormal forcing is to be deprecated, yet a starving bird, poorly nourished, will prove quite as unsatisfactory. It might be said that the bird is the soil on which feathers grow, hence should be properly cultivated. One so treated when killed will clean much better and present a better carcass than one that is dilatory in getting a new suit of winter clothing.

Now the function of clothes, whether tailor made or a growth in nature's laboratory, is protection against the elements which wear them out. Now, there are fashions in animal clothing and in bird millinery, as well as in the apparel that "oft proclaims the man." Clothes have much to do in the making of standards, and in no direction of animal husbandry more so than in pure-bred poultry. The color scheme of plumage in domesticated fowl makes its strongest appeal to the fancier and the fellow growing exhibition specimens; feathers here mean a great deal more than their protection to the bird, and hence their proper development assumes an importance of the first rank. But the commercial breeder who respects purity in his stock cannot wholly ignore feathers any more than the live-stock breeder can taboo color configurations in his cattle or hogs. Type designates the breed, and color the variety, and that means the feathers or plumage of the bird.

It goes without saying that but few people understand the anatomy of feathers, which primarily consist of quill, shaft and web. A recent writer in the Feathered World (London) has treated rather exhausitively on their structure and function. For instance, the quill is the horny tube which attaches the feather to the skin. It has a small opening at either end, where it is attached and where it merges into the shaft. The nutrient vascular pulp is contained in this hollow tube during the growing stages of the feather, which it draws from the body to feed the remaining portion. When the feather is fully developed the inside of the quill becomes by a gradual process almost empty, and the pulp or sap which it contains is drawn into the feather, leaving nothing but a dry, shriveled head at this stage. The feather is longer nourished by the body, because the bird is making preparation for a new growth of feathers. The young ones take their place, and they in their turn go through the same stages, nature thus replacing annually the old worn and torn garment by a new one which the bird requires to withstand the cold months of the year. It must be obvious, therefore, that the better the condition the bird is in during the growth of feathers the better they will be not only in quality but also quantity.

The shaft of the feather is a continuation of the quill. It is a spongy structure beneath a thin horny covering. In shape it is flat-sided with a convex back and grooved on the underside. From these flattened sides spring those delicate fibers called the web or plume, and also the fluff. This web, etc., consists of numerous barbs interlocked with minute processes termed barbules; in many feathers, the base of the web conists of loose, free, soft barks. This is, of course, the fluff. Few poultry keepers take the trouble to examine carefully the formation of their birds' feathers; a feather when closely examined by the aid of the microscope; is seen to be marvellously formed. The number of small fibers is simply astounding, and each barb is practically another small item attached to the main stem. These barbs gather, as we have previously seen, their life from the main stem, and their coloring and that of the fluff are derived from pigments existing in the blood of the bird. Students of the Standard of Perfection "know feathers," but all are not familiar with the subject, hence a short description will not be out of place. The long, narrow, pointed feathers of the neck are termed neck hackles, and those upon the posterior portion of the male's back are called saddle hackles. The saddle of the cock corresponds to the cushion of the hen. The true tail feathers are the ones that stand out straight and stiff in the tails of both sexes, but the large curved feathers of the tail in males are termed the sickles. The softer, smaller, curved feathers at the sides and bottom of the tail are the tail coverts. The first ten flight feathers of the wing are the primaries the next ten, approximately, are the secondaries. These cover the primaries when the wing is closed. The secondaries are often termed the wing boy when the wing is closed. The wing bow is composed of the feathers on the entire shoulder part of the wing. The broad feathers which spring from beneath the wing bow and cover the roots of the secondaries are the wing coverts. The marking of these wing coverts is naturally termed the wing bar. The characteristics of the breast feathers are similar to the back and flat of the wing.

The aphorism that "Fine feathers do not always make fine birds," may have an economic significance among so-called utility breeders, but in the home of purebreds, in the exhibition room, and in the fancier's yards, fine feathers do make fine birds.

The American Poultry Association has issued the following appeal to the secretaries of all specialty breed clubs in the United States and Canada:

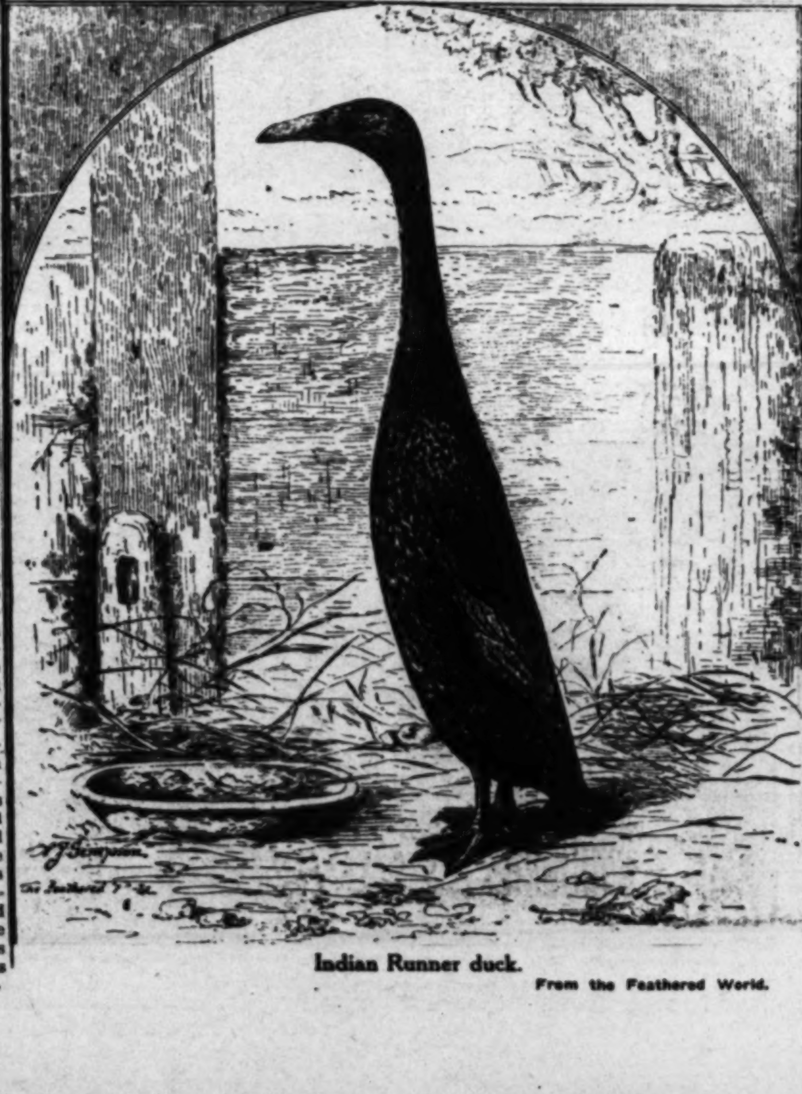
During th eshow season just started there will be National meets, District meets and State meets at the different shows and in the different sections of the United States and Canada, and at these meets, the officers and breeders of every specialty club should make arrangements to talk over and thoroughly discuss changes, or proposed changes, desired by them in the next Standard of Perfection.

This is very important, not only for the breeders themselves, but for the advancement of all breeds and varieties, for it is only by such discussions among the breeders that an ideal can be determined on and improvements brought to the notice of all concerned.

The intention of this invitation is to have every specialty club thoroughly discuss, during the coming show season, any and all changes proposed for the next Standard revision giving fully the reason that such change or changes are desired, and then mail all such information to the Chairman of the Committee on Standards.

The Standard of Perfection can be made representative, if all breeders are interested, therefore it is up to every breeder to become interested and express his views in the matter in which he should be interested.

The Standard Revision Committee will meet about May 1st, so all matter pertaining to any changes in the present standard should be in the hands of the Chairman before that time. Address all communications regarding revision to E. C. Branch, Chairman of the Revision Committee, Lee's Summit, Mo.



Indian Runner duck.

From the Feathered World.

Buff Orpington Ducks.

Among the newer breeds of ducks the Buff Orpington has become popular in both England and America. It is an introduction of William Cook, the father of the race of Orpington chickens. The color of plumage should be an even shade of fawn buff, with the exception of head and upper portion of neck in the drake, which should be a seal brown. The ducks are rated as good layers; the breed matures rapidly and furnishes a meat of good flavor and substance. Standard weights are: Adult drake, 8 pounds; young drake, 7; adult duck, 7; young duck, 6. Orpington ducks are not unknown in California, though not so plentiful nor popular as the Peking and Indian Runner.

Broadening the Standard.

The original price at which the Standard of Perfection was sold by the American Poultry Association was $1 per copy; then it was raised to $1.50, again to $2, and now it sells for $2.50. We presume that this is none too much under the changing economic conditions of business; but it is rather a stiff price for the fellow with only one breed or variety of fowl. To widen its usefulness many have advocated the publication of breed standards (covering only a single breed,) which could be sold at a nominal price, say 50 cents and up per copy. Undoubtedly many would buy these who hesitate to buy the complete volume. It seems to be the consensus of opinion among the specialty clubs of America that their members would absorb many copies, while breeders handling large numbers of breeding and foundation stock would also take many copies to present to customers making liberal purchases. We know that in California there exists a good demand for breed standards—a condition that must prevail quite as strongly in other States. Then, why not have them?

The Voice of Wisdom.

H. E. Upton, government poultry specialist in British Columbia, complains that the pure-breds in his province are losing size, due possibly to either inbreeding or the use of high record hens in the breeding pen. He further says that he has always maintained that 150 to 180-egg hens make the best commercial breeding stock, and that 80-86 per cent hatchability and 5-7 per cent mortality were the result of breeding from flocks with this record in British Columbia. Continuing, he says: "I fail in my library to find anything of value showing the hatchability and liveability of chicks from any commercial flock with an average of 190 to 200 eggs. Until the persons entrusted with public moneys can show the way to select, breed up and assure us of better results financially than the 150-180 egg flock gives, I am of the opinion that the people are wasting good money and time listening and practicing theoretical ventures and are like the fool who burns the candle at both ends—making a grand display of a few hens' laying records, yet not telling us how many eggs it took to produce one or more phenomenal layers."

Fairs a Success.

WITH the California Flower Show and Horticultural Exhibition in Los Angeles, and the Festival of Dates, at Indio, now pleasing and educating thousands, one of the greatest agricultural show seasons in Southern California's history is drawing to a close.

The unusual interest taken in the fairs and shows this fall, both by exhibitors and the general public, makes it apparent that every person who has the good of Southern California at heart should help in the effort to combine, in a great fair, held at a central point, the exhibits of all the Southern counties. The people of Riverside hold a Southern California Fair each year. But the buildings are entirely inadequate for the holding of the kind of exposition which the Southland could and should boost. Whether this great fair for the southern part of the State is to be held at Riverside, at or near Los Angeles, or at some other point, is a question that can be decided by an impartial investigation. A beginning should be made now, however, to get the aid of the State and the southern county governments enlisted for a fair that next year shall adequately reflect Southern California's wonderful agricultural resources. The agriculture of the southern counties is meagerly represented at the State Fair at Sacramento for the reason that most of the exhibitors of this section will not ship their products and animals so great a distance.

California's agricultural and live-stock industries will benefit greatly as a result of the fairs and shows of 1921. In any community fairs are of great educational value. At the county and district fairs and shows of Southern California this year the educational features were of a high order. Boys' and girls' agricultural clubs made entries, and participated in judging contests. Women took a prominent part, showing the way to better farm homes and the betterment of farm life. The latest achievements of agricultural engineers in the way of providing farms with power and improved implements were shown at every fair. Impressions carried home from the fairs will be lasting and redound to the benefit of the farmer and his family.

More and better live-stock, better fruits, nuts, grains and vegetables and better farm methods are urged upon the attention of the growers every year at the fairs. It sometimes happens that the gate receipts of these fairs do not equal the expenditures, but the community staging the exhibits receives a benefit that is hardly to be measured in dollars. The larger fair combining the exhibits of the whole section would attract an attendance from far and near and would undoubtedly pay for itself financially.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA FAIR AT RIVERSIDE GROWING IN SCOPE.

LIVING up to its name as an event in which all the people of Southern California participate, the Southern California Fair, at Riverside, was a big, interesting group of exhibits and entertaining features as a whole unexcelled in the State this year. Its many departments were replete with evidences of the agricultural, civic and domestic progress of the Garden of America—Southern California.

Under the handicap of insufficient exhibit room and equipment for the staging of an immense fair, the officials of the Southern California Fair Association and the producers of that fertile agricultural region of which Riverside is the center presented a great agricultural exposition, which was a credit to the city and to the Southwest.

It is believed by Secretary W. W. Van Pelt of the Fair Association, that the attendance averaged 15,000 a day for the six days of the Fair. Some of these people came hundreds of miles to see the displays. They viewed live stock, agricultural machinery, domestic, industrial, educational and art displays of very high merit. The dairy cattle, swine and poultry exhibits were the best in the State this year, in the opinion of live-stock and poultry authorities. The exhibit of Bantams was declared by the poultry judges to be one of the best ever seen, surpassing any other ever shown on the Pacific Coast.

Fair officials had a program of entertainment par excellence to divert their guests. Races, airplane stunts, midway attractions, vaudeville numbers and other attractions supplemented the elaborate exhibitions of fruits, vegetables, grains, nuts, animals, useful arts, etc. The woman's department was visited by many thousands, and contained notable exhibits, educational and interesting.

An effort will be made during the coming year to secure a greater legislative appropriation for more and better Southern California Fair buildings, to take care af the large number of exhibits which will doubtless be offered next year. Before the 1921 Fair started, the management was compelled to refuse exhibit space to a number of live-stock breeders and exhibitors of agricultural products, owing to the lack of exhibit room.

The officers and directors of the Southern California Fair Association are: President, C. H. Lewis; vice-president, J. E. McGregor; treasurer, E. A. French; secretary, W. W. Van Pelt; directors, Riverside, J. F. Backstrand, J. C. Cooper, Oscar Crowell, Dr. C. S. Dickson, Mrs. A. E. Davis, E. M. Doyle, W. H. Ellis, W. H. Fertig, T. F. Flaherty, J. R. Gabbert, F. A. Gardner, E. M. Gifford, J. T. Garner, Roy Hellmer, O. E. Holland, H. W. Hammond, H. A. Hammond, Ross L. Hammond, E. I. Hammond, W. A. Johnson, Robert Kirkpatrick, S. F Kennedy, C. H. Lewis, Myron Milice, Karl Martin, J. E. McGregor, Axel Nelson, H. G. Stanley, A. J. Stalder, L. G. Valiant, R. J. Welch, F. E. Wherrell, F. P. Younglove; W. W. Ayers, Highgrove; Robert N. Clapp, Nuevo; M. F. Gillman, Banning; F. L. Hall, Perris; Robert Kirkpatrick, Elsinore; O. K. Kelsey, West Riverside; Ben H. Ormond, San Bernardino; F. T. Pearson, Corona; John B. Weston Hemet; F. M. Sallee, San Jacinto; George W. Thomas, Arlington; A. E. Warmington, Los Angeles.

The department superintendents were: Horses, F. L. Hall; cattle and sheep, George W. Thomas; swine, F. A. Langdon; junior clubs, J. F. Osborn; goats, Oscar Crowell; apiary, R. Powell; dairy, S. F. Kennedy; agriculture, O. K. Kelsey; horticulture, D. D. Sharp; child welfare, Dr. Louise Harvey Clarke; woman's work, Mrs. A. E. Davis; educational, Mrs. H. E. DeNyse; poultry and rabbits, E. I. Hammond.

Taking advantage of the educational opportunity presented by the excellent live-stock entries, nearly 300 young members of agricultural clubs visited the fair. Many engaged in judging contests, while others proudly exhibited stock of their own, swine, poultry and calves of high lineage. The displays made by these boys and girls showed splendid advancement in agricultural club work in the southern part of the State. Winners of first prizes in club live-stock competition were: Stella Mae Dillard, Etiwanda; Hazen Cornelius, Ontario; George Beard, Cucamonga; Frank C. Curtis, Chino; Harry Wingard, Pomona, Edward Klagge, Chino; Myron Gemmell, Ontario, Thurman B. Irwin, Chino; Leland Glazier, Val Verde, and Kenneth Berry, Chino.

In the agricultural division, best fruits of the soil were shown by many counties and communities. The winners in these divisions were, for county exhibits: First, Fresno; second, Kings; third, San Bernardino; fourth, Orange; fifth, Imperial; special fruit exhibit. Los Angeles city. For community displays, Hemet received first prize, Perris second, Elsinore third, Jurupa fourth, Corona fifth, Arlington sixth, and Coachella Valley seventh. For horticultural displays, Banning was first and Beaumont second. E. W. Barnes of West Riverside captured first prize for ranch exhibits and J. M. Nelson of Moreno the prize for the best products grown without irrigation. George C. Rice, C. A. Rice, of Blythe, and C. E. Cook and James Baldwin, of Indio received prizes for best long and short staple cotton.

THE PLACE OF THE MOUNTAIN RANCH IN OUR AGRICULTURE.

BY ROBERT R. BENSON.

THE Southland is a region of mountain and valley.

The valleys are small, distinct, differing quite markedly in their geography and agricultural adaptability. Between adjacent valleys, and round about them, are mountains which, too, are climatic barriers between not only the valleys but also between the desert and the Pacific and between the great Central Valley and the Southland. We are apt to consider mountains as waste land agriculturally, or to concede them only the virtue of being our watersheds, of contributing only that which makes the valley farms productive, or to forget them entirely as we grow eloquent in the praise of this valley or of that.

During the prune-gathering in the Banning district an itinerant workman stopped by the orchard for a noon-time rest and roadside lunch, and, in speaking of his wanderings reminisced over the valleys of his labors—the bean lands of our southern Santa Clara, the little ranches in the little Ojai, the great beet fields at Oxnard, the grain-hay harvest in the Simi and Santa Susanna, the growth of San Ferhando, the wealth of San Gabriel, the reclamation in Coachella, and the swarming Imperial. Now he was in a mountain pass with high ranges close at either hand; ranges that I know full well, and within which I can picture the site of many a mountain ranch which is contributing to the Southland's annual harvest, not so much in quantity of product as in quality and in the enlargement of variety of resources of which each valley boasts.

The total value of the product from mountain ranches is very small—it always will be so—in comparison to that of the valleys, but credit for even this minor production is greedily absorbed by the valleys, which are the mountain outlets. To exemplify; much of the honey of Antelope Valley is derived from the sages of the lower Sierra Madre slopes and the hills of Elizabeth Lake; cattle shipments from San Bernardino often originate on cattle ranges operating in Little and Big Bear Valleys; San Diegan apples grow far back on the crest of the Cuyamacas at Julian and Wynola; our southern "cherry valleys" are on such heights as Mesa Grande, and the bench lands above Beaumont and Banning. No great importance, then, need be attached to the place of mountain ranching in the Southland, and yet a thorough study of the section's agricultural resources cannot, in justice, ignore their place in our midst.

Some have been characterized as "good places upon which to starve to death," and many forsaken little cabins are to be found here and there in the hills, with perhaps a few half-dead fruit trees straggling over the eaves, or a little olive orchard still bravely green where all else of man's planting has passed away, or traces of plowed ground

COMMISSIONER ON WATCH.

H. J. Ryan, Horticultural Commissioner for Los Angeles county, shows in his annual report that 14,593 packages of green, over ripe, wormy and rotten fruits were condemned during the year, and 95,459 trees and vines infested with pests or diseases, or both, were condemned. A total of 6117 carloads of fruits were inspected.

SMALL FRUITS PRODUCTION.

Census figures show that California was fourth among the States in the production of strawberries and blackberries, with 10,808,048 quarts, and 2,549,082, respectively, in 1919. The acreage of strawberries in California, most of which lies in Los Angeles, Orange and Imperial counties, was 4974 acres, and of blackberries, 1678 acres.

PURPLE VETCH SEED.

C. S. Milliken of the Fruit Growers Supply Company recently informed the Agricultural Extension Service of Los Angeles County that purple vetch seed will be available for cover crops this season. The price quoted by the supply company is 18c per pound. It is expected that there will be a considerable acreage planted to purple vetch this season, for it is considered the best winter cover crop for average conditions now known.

As the vegetables are gathered in the garden cut down the plants and hoe them into the soil if they are free from disease.

[illegible] the kernels are hard and the lower three or four leaves are brown as a result of the maturing process. The drying up of the husks is another good indication that the corn is ready to cut. However, if the corn is allowed to ripen more thoroughly, a moldy silage may result, due to the pockets or spots of finely cut corn not packing satisfactorily. Silage will be too acid or sour if cut when much greener than this, and besides, it will prove unpalatable, and its keeping qualities will be much impaired.

Farm News of the Great Southwest.
DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

WHITTIER.—One of the latest organizations and one which represents millions of dollars is the Whittier District Fruit Exchange, the result of a combination of eight citrus fruit associations of this vicinity. The new exchange plans to handle about 3600 carloads of citrus fruit during the coming season and will send out the first shipments about November 1. The associations uniting to form the exchange are: Whittier Citrus Association, East Whittier Citrus Association, Whittier Select Citrus Groves, Whittier Orange and Lemon Growers' Association, North Whittier Heights Citrus Association, Leffingwell Ranch Lemon Association, El Ranchito Citrus Association and the Rivera Fruit Association. The local exchange is a member of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange of Los Angeles. Dalton A. Field, who has had many years' experience in such work, has been engaged as manager for the new exchange and has plans well under way for handling the big output of citrus fruits from the Whittier district.

NEW RIVERA CENTER.

RIVERA.—The first fall meeting of the recently organized Rivera farm bureau center was held in the local schoolhouse October 19. Robert W. Hodgson, farm adviser for Los Angeles county, spoke on "The Deterioration of Citrus Orchards; Causes and Prevention." W. S. Rosecrans, who was recently elected president of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, spoke on "Some Notable Achievements in Farm Bureau Work, National and Local."

FEEDERS FOR ALFALFA.

EL CENTRO.—The decrease last season in the cotton acreage from 80,000 acres to less than 50,000 in Imperial county was followed by an unprecedented increase in alfalfa acreage, and the result is an abundance of green feed. Outside cattlemen, taking advantage of the situation, are ship- [illegible] local cattlemen, too, are increasing their herds, and the prospects are bright that Imperial will now come into its kingdom as a dairy and stock country. The drop in the price of cotton to below the cost of production was looked upon by valley people generally, and cotton growers especially, as a calamity. The slump caused many financial wrecks, it is true, but as a whole the valley is the gainer, for many of the cotton growers have turned to alfalfa and live stock, and these branches of the farming industry, when all is said and done, have proven the best bets for any country.

Bit of Yucaipa Valley Apple Festival exhibit.

CLUBS FOR SCHOOLS.

VISALIA.—California pig and poultry clubs are to be formed in Tulare county schools in the near future, C. M. Conners, farm adviser planning a tour of the county for their organization. Cups are to be given prize winners and the student making the best showing by the middle of next month will be given a free trip to the Davis Farm to attend the poultry convention. Purebred breeders throughout the county will give advice to members of the club. Plans for financing the clubs have been arranged.

Priming with the best gasoline will help start the tractor.

[illegible] FESTIVAL A SUCCESS.

YUCAIPA.—The most successful apple harvest festival ever held in the Yucaipa Valley was that of this year, when the women of the valley took entire charge of the festival. The men said they were too busy to "monkey with it." The women bargained for all the proceeds if they did the work, and as a result cleared enough to finish the interior of the $15,000 clubhouse they have just built.

The festival this year was held October 7 and 8 at the clubhouse. The interior has not been finished; the women had not the money. But it was used for the play which was given, and also for the turkey dinner, which was served three times to more than 2000 persons in all.

The play given was "His Millionaire Uncle" and it was a great success. Those in the cast were Ruth Cruickshank, Constance Dunham, Hallie Adams, Harriet Hasbrouck, Mrs. William Cruickshank, Roberta Williams, Miss Arnety, Foster Edwards, Luther Carpenter and Harold Rouse. Motion pictures were also shown to entertain the guests.

The festival is unique in that there is but one prize given, and that is one of $25 to the most successful booth in the court of booths. This year the court opened off the patio of the clubhouse, which opened off decorated with greenery and which was used for dancing. The booths were covered with palm leaves, as was part of the court, a roof being formed of these and banners. There were booths for the sale of apples, cider and candy, as well as "hot dogs" and the like. Then there were booths for the display of fancy work of all kinds, and one booth with a display of plates of apples, the best fruit grown in the valley.

The center of the court was a six-sided rack, on which the six apple associations showed ten boxes each of their finest fruit. This was donated to the women, and later sold at a fancy price.

FAMOUS WOLF KILLED.

KINGMAN, ARIZ.—A wolf which, cattlemen estimate, killed 50 white-faced yearling cattle in the past year and whose depredations have extended over several years, was killed by a Federal hunter near here recently. The wolf was wary of man, but did not mind the approach of an auto, and fell at the first shot of a rifle.

GOING AFTER WEEDS.

VISALIA.—Weeds and the best method of getting rid of them now occupy much of the attention of the Tulare county horticultural commissioner. Having practically completed the season's work of fighting squirrels, the campaigners found the farmers more interested in destroying the weed crop than in anything else. The squirrel workers found that at least 60,000 acres have been cleaned of these pests,—this land being on the plains, and 90 per cent of the remainder has only a few squirrels to the acre. A little clean-up drive may be staged next year to continue the eradication. Practically 95 per cent of the land owners show a willingness to co-operate.

NO DAMAGE TO HENDERSONS.

VAN NUYS.—Recent rains caused no serious damage to Henderson bush beans, although a large acreage was cut when the moisture fell, according to reports made at a recent meeting of growers who talked with R. L. Churchill, manager of the California Lima Bean Growers' Association. The growers anticipate that beans will move with more rapidity this season. No price was set at the meeting.

Spraying Triumphs Again

Evidence of Remarkable Results from Right Use of Carefully Compounded Arsenical Sprays Continues to Pile Up

PROPAGANDA against arsenical spraying has lost its grip in the light of new facts constantly developing from the use of sprays in the right way.

The development within the past two years of a new sprayer—the SUPER-GIANT—makes spraying with VICTORY and TIZIT sprays absolutely effective. The work of this sprayer and both brands of spray has been generally successful throughout the citrus industry. In some communities a majority of growers use nothing but VICTORY or TIZIT. No damage from the hot spell has been reported to us.

The improved method of applying VICTORY and TIZIT with the SUPER-GIANT should not be confused with older methods of application. Putting the spray on under pressure of 400 pounds means that every point of leaf surface is reached and covered with spray. In this way there is a positive control of sucking insects, red spider and fungus diseases. No other method of cleaning or disinfecting produces any such effects.

Be Careful in Your Judgment of Arsenical Spray.

Make sure that by taking snap judgment based on prejudice or hearsay you are not kidding yourself out of a profit. Remember, you can use VICTORY and TIZIT with just as good results as hundreds of other growers—if you use it properly—under high pressure.

Don't let a notion stand in the way of a clean grove, healthy trees and fruit that matures six weeks earlier.

Spraying is economical—highly satisfactory—sure-fire in results.

Ask the man who has applied VICTORY or TIZIT in combination with the latest methods.

IN SHOW'S HISTORY.

The progress of the milk goat industry in Southern California has been strikingly reflected in the growth from year to year of the goat exhibits of the Southern California Fair.

When the goat show was first instituted at Riverside, in 1917, the entries number seven, all grades. The next year the number of entries had increased to sixty, of which only a few were pure breds. This year more than 200 animals were shown and of these fifty-eight were pure breds. Thirty-three of the pure breds were Toggenburgs, seventeen, Saanans, and eight Anglo-Nubians. The division of the grades, which were of high quality, was about in the same proportion.

The judging was done by L. M. Bridinger, of Santa Rosa, a well-known breeder of Saanans, and satisfaction over his awards was general. The Santa Rosa man was highly pleased with the excellent showing by Southern California exhibitors, especially with the Saanan entries from south of the Tehachepi, which, he declared, undoutedly included some of the finest specimens of the breed in the world. Oscar Crowell of Riverside, acted as manager of the show.

Following is the list of awards:

THE USE OF THE PATCH BUD IN THE PROPAGATION OF NUT TREES.

BY W. E. SCOTT.

PATCH budding has been found very successful in propagating nut trees. This method can be used for both nursery stock and for top-working large trees. There are several reasons why patch budding is so successful:

First—The long season in which the work can be done. This work can be started early in the spring, when the trees commence growing and can be done until late in the fall, or as long as the bark will readily slip.

Second—Because buds can be cut fresh from the trees the same day they are to be used, any time during the season, which assures getting fresh and vigorous buds.

Third—Another advantage in this method is that three or four buds can be placed on a tree at one time and if for any reason they fail to live, the trees can be budded again and again until they do live.

Fourth—Another reason is that the patch bud can be placed on trees and limbs that are several inches thick. This is of great advantage in top-working large trees.

There are many other advantages to be gained by using the patch bud, but I wish only to set forth the main reasons.

IN THE NURSERY.

Where there are a large number of trees to be budded, it is a good plan to cut the bud sticks while they are dormant, and to store them the same as scions are stored for grafting. These bud sticks are kept perfectly dormant until the trees commence to grow in the spring. A short time before the budding is to be done the bud sticks are brought out of storage and put in a place where they will warm up and start to slip, that is, the sap will liven up so that the dormant buds can be removed from the bud sticks, without difficulty. This is known as budding with dormant wood and it can be done as long as the bud sticks can be kept fresh in storage. If it is impossible to store dormant wood, and there are trees from which buds can be secured as needed, it is not necessary to store bud sticks in this way, as dormant buds can be found on the trees, after they start growing. Every bud that is formed on a tree does not make a twig or branch, which fact an examination of a tree will plainly show. A great many perfectly good buds never grow unless they are in a position where they are needed. These buds remain on the trees but never grow unless they are forced out.

There is very little work in preparing the trees for budding and the work can be started whenever the buds are ready to use. It is a good plan to put the buds in rather high the first time the budding is done as some of the buds may not live and the next time the trees are budded the buds may be put in below where they were budded the previous time and in this way the scar left from the previous bud will be removed, when the tree is cut back to force out the new bud. A tree should never be cut back until the bud has thoroughly united with the stock. When a bud has united on the stock it will have to be forced out, or it will very likely remain dormant and eventually perish. This forcing out is done by cutting the tree off several inches above the bud. All the growth that starts on the stock should be kept rubbed off so that the strength will go into the bud. The stub is left a few inches long above the bud to be used as a support to tie the bud to, as it develops into a tree. When the bud has become strong enough to support itself the stub can be removed.

There are advantages and disadvantages in budding high on nursery stock. One advantage is that it puts the union of the bud and stock up high enough so that it does not come in contact with the soil. This is a great advantage where certain varieties of trees will not do well on their own roots in that particular soil. One objection to high budding is that it makes a tree conspicuous, as in the case of the English walnut worked on black walnut stock.

As the season advances, buds of the current year's growth can be used, if they have matured enough. It is a good plan to prepare them several weeks before they are needed by cutting off the leaf twig close to the bud. This will cause the bud to throw off the part of the leaf twig left on it and leave the bud in a much better condition to work with. When the buds are put in late in the season it is usually better to let them remain dormant on the tree and not to try to force them out until the next spring.

PLACING THE BUD.

For the benefit of those who have never used the patch bud, I will give a short description of how it is cut and placed on the stock. A knife for cutting patch buds can be made by fastening two knives together in such a manner that their blades will cut parallel to each other about one inch apart. A third knife is used to finish cutting out and removing the patch bud. When the bud has been selected, the patch is cut out by placing the double knife with one blade above the bud and the other below at an equal distance and a cut made part way around the bud stick; the single knife is then used to finish cutting out the patch bud and to remove it from the bud stick. The same operation is used to cut a patch from the stock where the bud is to be placed. Care must be taken to cut the two patches the same size, as the success of the work depends largely upon the way these patches fit. This fitting must be done quickly as the cambium layer should not be exposed to the air very long.

After the bud has been placed on the stock it should be wrapped securely with a strip of cloth, cotton string or raffia, to hold it in place. Experience has taught the writer that a narrow strip of muslin gives the best results. The way this is used is to wrap it around the stock, covering the patch entirely except for the bud, which is left exposed. The cloth is then sealed with grafting wax, care being taken not to let the wax come in contact with the bud. This wrapping is left in place until the bud unites with the stock and starts to grow and then it should be cut on the opposite side from the bud but not removed from the stock. This wrapping will eventually be forced off b ythe growth of the bud.

The best grafting wax for this kind of work is made from one part beeswax and two parts rosin, which is melted together; when the mixture commences to cool and harden add denatured alcohol until it becomes soft and of a golden yellow color.

TOP-WORKING.

The difference between patch budding large limbs and nursery stock is that the bark on large limbs is always much thicker than the bark on the patch bud.

When large limbs are to be patch budded the size of the limb is not as important as the thickness of the bark; however, the larger the limb the larger will be the wound made when the limb is cut back to the bud

[illegible] UTAH VALLEY HAS BIG FUTURE.

Los Angeles has an attractive opportunity for extending its back country into the Pahvant Valley in Utah, according to Dr. George P. Clements, manager of the agriculture department of the Chamber of Commerce, who recently returned from a district celebration in that region.

The valley is 609 miles from Los Angeles on the Salt Lake branch of the Union Pacific, and comprises an area of 240,000 acres, of which 135,000 are under irrigation. Dr. Clements believes that this valley offers excellent inducements to new comers in Southern California whose capital is not sufficient to establish them on the higher priced lands here. The present population of the valley is approximately 10,000, of whom some 80 per cent are from the old Mormon stock. Under the old Mormon law twenty acres was the limit permitted to any farmer and the advisability of this ruling is demonstrated in the comfortable brick homes and self-sustaining orchards of the little farms.

According to the Chamber of Commerce man, the valley is an excellent agricultural country, at one time the bottom of a great lake, as the soils are sedimentary. At the present time the valley is producing one-fifth of all the alfalfa seed raised in the United States. Three principal varieties are grown—the Grimm, Peruvian, both hairy and smooth, and Chilean. The average yield per acre last year was reported at 1806 pounds. In the center of the old lake bed a five-year average was shown of eighteen tons of sugar beets, testing 18 per cent available sugar per acre.

And Still Growing.

Tomato plant eleven feet and a half high at home of John William Park on 104th street, Los Angeles. Mr. Park says he has picked 65 ripe tomatoes and many green ones from this vine.

The leading onion-producing States in 1919 were, California, 8512 acres, and New York, 7500 acres.

[illegible] within remnants of fencing, or dilapidated windmills—all this evidence seems to support a scornful attitude. On the other hand, here are some ranches which point the moral of this story.

Some Highland Ranches.

Colby's Ranch in upper Tejunga, though usually held in the light of a summer retreat and former hunters' rendezvous, is essentially a ranch—where the dwellers live by virtue of the soil's response to their toil. The whole story of the founding of the ranch over twenty-eight years ago; of the planting of the orchards of cherry, apple, and pear which yield so abundantly now; of the installation of a water-power saw-mill where box shook could be made from the timber of the near-by mountain slopes; of the annual burro train pilgrimages that each winter bring down to Pasadenan markets those pears and apples which are so heartily welcomed for their mountain fragrance and sprightliness of flavor; of the upbuilding of the flocks of chickens, ducks, and geese that so noisily greet the traveler entering the ranch from the steep trail above, one of which may later grace his supper board; of the rabbits in their storied hutches; of the cattle wandering in Tejunga, Alder Creek, Wildcat Canyon, and Lynx Gulch—that is certainly a story of pioneer agriculture brought down to the present day.

There was a time when immense herds of cattle were pastured in the San Bernardino mountains, especially in the country about Big Bear Valley from which were trails of easy access into the winter range country of the desert. Even today, the cattle industry is a remunerative industry in the Big Bear, where are located the I. S. ranch and the Barker-Shay holdings. It was but recently that a big cattle drive was recorded by local newspapers announcing the closing of the road out of Big Bear during the time required for some 500 odd head to be herded down to the feed yards at San Bernardino. And each year still, when snow threatens in the valley, exodus is made to the guyetta-grass and browse range of Twenty-nine Palms and the Lost Horse, while in the spring the big herds and smaller bunches are rounded up in the desert and headed again for mountain pastures by way of Mission Creek, Little Morongo, and Victorville road.

Clark's Ranch on the road to Big Bear, the laden apple orchards of Oak Glen, the tall cherry trees of Beaumont's "Mile-High Ranch" and on the Montgomery Bench, the young orchards on the heights above Banning, the reservation pastures—all these are too familiar and too readily accessible to be thought of as "mountain lands," but can they be placed in any other category?

Across the Pass, in the San Jacintos, is a highland thickly dotted with mountain ranches not of the Mexican "mañana" type but well tilled, producing farmsteads. In the lower foothills, hidden far back in the hills, is the old Wolfskill estate—the property of an old Spanish family—some four thousand acres of canyon sediment and rolling foothills where now, in deep, black soil by a little lake, a grove of stately walnut grows, where patches of corn and maize tell of hogs to be raised and fattened, where sloping hay fields thrust themselves into every nook and corner of the hills like fiords in a rocky coast, where cattle browse over the brush clad slopes near-by. When Banning was known as San Gorgonio, Wolfeskill was the country-side resort, for a healthy spring maintains the level of a little lake from which water for irrigating is drawn.

Higher up on San Jacinto are apple orchards of which Brown's Ranch above Cabazon is best known and most fruitful. Here, in a broad level swale made fertile by soil washed down from pine clad slopes, a splendid apple orchard has been established. The soil is light sand at the surface but passes quickly into a black loam, sub-irrigated and easily worked. There are "wet fields," too,—shallow-soiled and boggy—unsuited to deep-rooting apple trees but adapted to late crops of quick maturing root vegetables which hogs can root out. The choicest of apples mature in this orchard; varieties ranging from the early Red Astrachan through Mackintosh, Rome Beauty, Ben Davis, Gloria Mundi, Winesap, Spitzenberg to Hoover. At Brown's too, the mountain slopes and canyons support a small herd which can be easily driven to market over the reconstructed Hall Grade—that steep trail of the days of the Skidway lumber boom.

Other apple orchards border the county road to Idyllwild, from all of which come the "mountain apple" in buckboard, old hickory, or trailer. South of Idyllwild in the San Jacintos are the Garner holdings—splendid cattle range, well stocked, and with easy retreat in winter to the valley pastures and markets in the valley of San Jacinto.

Farther south, San Diego county displays its highland ranches. Above the broad marsh-land cienega of Warner's Hot Springs where thousands of cattle graze the [illegible] quality of [illegible] cherries. [illegible] near Santa Ysabel, is another great range but shallow-soiled and dry, eastward from which ascending into the Cuyamaca range are found the mountain-top apple orchards of Wynola and Julian, perched on the divide between the Salton basin and the coastal drainage.

Scattered throughout all these ranges, in their lower foothills, especially, are thousands of small apiaries—for honey is probably the most valuable agricultural product of the mountains. The foothills and canyons support a great variety of nectar-bearing bloom which, coming in rotation from the early spring flowers includes the mountain lilac, manzanita, dogwood, various sages, wild buckwheat, and the great succession of lupines and late-blooming annuals.

These, then, the mountains contribute to the valleys—choice apples and pears with the spice of frost-land in their substance; cherries of great size and depth of color; feeder cattle, less commonly fattened stock; strained honey and combs of white-sage honey—distinctive products, all, to which must always be appended these two immeasurable commodities of inestimable worth, namely, climatic protection and water.

BOYS WANT TRANSPORTATION.

Who will donate the use of a car to winners in boys' club contests in Los Angeles county who desire to attend the annual convention of boy agriculturists at Davis, Cal.? There are many boys in the county eligible to attend this convention, but no means of transportation is available. County Club Leader W. G. Waterhouse has managed to get one machine, but one or two more are required.

The Livestock Bulletin.

BY ROBERT V. EVANS.

Live-stock breeders of Southern California met at a dinner at the Riverside Mission Inn on October 14 and formed an organization known as the Southern California Pure Bred Breeders' Association, the object of which will be to promote breeding, sales, exhibition and protective measures for live stock. H. Michel of Santa Monica was chosen president of the new association; George Thomas of Arlington, vice-president, and W. W. Van Pelt of Riverside, secretary-treasurer. To act on the board of directors representatives of each breed of horses, cattle, sheep and hogs, making a total of fifteen men, were selected as follows: Fred Hall, Percheron horses; John Troup, Sr., Clydesdale horses; R. N. Clapp, Holstein cattle; George Thomas, Jerseys; Mark Butterfield, Ayrshires; F. A. Langdon, dairy Shorthorns; Guernseys, W. H. Dupee; beef Shorthorns, Frank Collier; Herefords, H. D. Ogden; Aberdeen-Angus, F. F. Peabody; J. J. Prendergast, Shropshire sheep; Alex Wilson, Berkshire swine; J. C. Craig, Duroc-Jerseys; A. E. Harvey, Hampshires, and Charles McDonald, Poland-Chinas.

The general feeling among the large number of breeders present was that such an organization as the one effected is a step forward, and will undoubtedly operate for good in that it will bring about a union of forces that can, by co-operation, better face the existing live-stock problems. By united effort such a plan, if carried out on a broad, sensible basis, without allowing petty jealousies to creep in, should work for great good to Southern California breeders. The strong list of representatives who have been elected for the coming year should have the hearty support of every live-stock breeder who hopes to promote future development for his own herd in particular and for the live-stock industry of this section as a whole.

The Rio Hondo Rancho of Compton has recently sold two senior yearling Hampshire boars to the Eden Valley Ranch of Mendocino County. These boars weigh 350 and 370 pounds respectively, and are to be used to grade up a large herd on range by the new owners. They expect to produce the desired long, stretchy bacon type which is in demand.

One of the newest herds of Poland China hogs to be found in this section is that of Harrington & Page of Simi. Although only starting in the business this spring, this firm was able by means of its good foundation stock, to give a good account of itself at the recent San Fernando fair, where it exhibited a pen of four pigs, winning the silver cup offered by the Eastman Rancho for the best herd under one year of age, also three second prizes and one fourth.

O. H. Cash of the Sierra Vista Stock Ranch Company, reports that the ranch's showing of Holstein cattle and Duroc Jersey hogs at Sacramento, Stockton, Hanford and Fresno fairs, has resulted in premiums won to the amount of $765. On its Durocs this firm has won twenty-eight firsts, sixteen seconds, eleven thirds, one [illegible] prizes, [illegible] medal, three silver medals, and a silver trophy. In the Holstein classes, their winnings include thirteen firsts, eleven seconds, two thirds, one fourth, two junior champion, one reserve junior champion, three senior champion, and two grand champion ribbons, in addition to three silver medals and a gold medal.

Dichter Spofford Korndyke Vale, first junior yearling at the California State Fair, 1921, sired by Dichter Spofford Korndyke Lad 5th, has been sold by the California George Junior Republic to E. G. Stinson of Orange to head a herd of twenty-five Holsteins which he has been accumulating all over the State. The bull's dam was Geneva [illegible] tion cows selected by [illegible] and purchased and donated to the Republic by [illegible] Bartlett. She is by the son of the King of the Pontiacs, the greatest bull of the Holstein breed. The boys at the Republic have given both of these cows two-year-old records of over 14,000 pounds.

On October 27 B. H. and K. B. Edwards of the Edwards ranch of Highland, Cal., will hold a sale of pure-bred Poland-China hogs. Seventy head will be disposed of at this time, including fifteen registered big-boned sows, two registered herd boars, fifty-three head young gilts and boars, one grade sow and nine shoats. Some are prize winners at Riverside fairs. Holloman and Whiteside are to be the auctioneers.

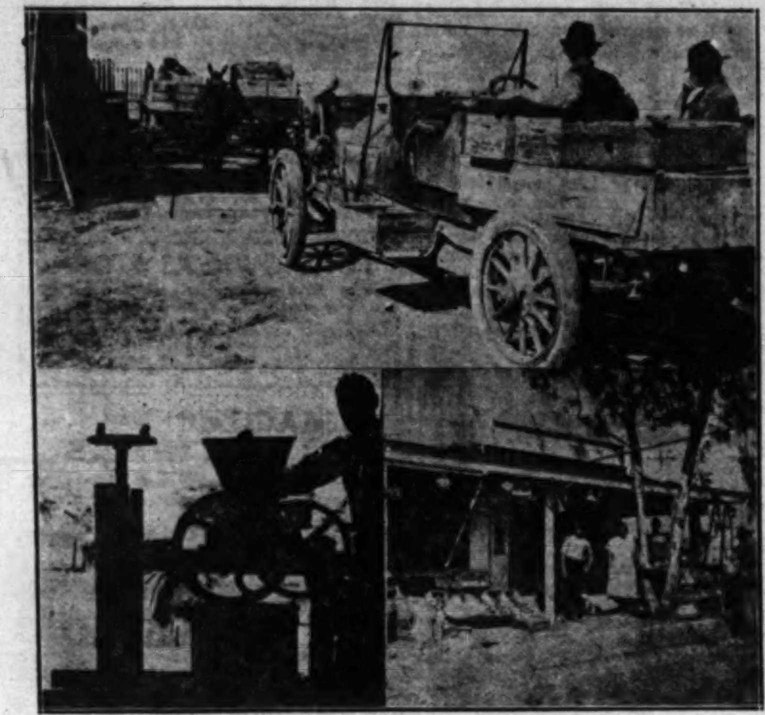
GOOD PROFITS MADE FROM FALLEN FRUIT.

YUCAIPA.—"But what do they do with all those apples on the ground?" is among the first of the questions asked by the tenderfoot who visits the Yucaipa apple orchards at this season when a whole valley is toiling to handle hundreds of carloads of fruit.

They are not wasted, hardly any of them. The apple grower has learned that the windfall he has ever with him and that there are any number of uses to which these apples can be put. These apples are most of them good; they are not wormy. To prevent the wormy apple, the grower religiously sprays during the time the fruit is on the tree. This year three sprays did the work. Some years it is necessary to spray even four or five times.



Handling Yucaipa Valley's Big Apple Crop.
Every kind of vehicle is impressed into service in getting the marketable fruit to the warehouses, while wayside stands and cider presses take care of the windfalls.

So these apples, which are bruised by the fall unless a great and somewhat expensive carpet of soft straw is put under the tree to catch them, are used to make apple cider. Throughout the Yucaipa Valley there are scattered scores of cider making plants, some of them home made presses, most of them the latest type to be bought in the market. From the windfalls is pressed sweet juice which is sold over the soda fountain counters and for it the maker gets 50 cents a gallon wholesale.

Then there are the little stands that have sprung up all along the main highways and here are sold the windfall apples, the cider and in some cases homemade apple pies and apple butter. These apples can be sold as culls for probably 1 to 2 cents a pound and the grower has come to look on it as "velvet."

The scenes of activity in the great red apple country now are most interesting. Around the packing-houses where the apples are packed and prepared for the market has sprung up automobile camps where many of the fruit workers make their home all during the season of harvest. All sorts of vehicles have been pressed into service to carry apples from the orchards to the packing-houses. The big trucks are all needed for the long haul so that the family touring car, the old one-horse shay, the spring wagon and the orchard wagons have been pressed into service to deliver the apples at the packing plant.

IRRIGATE YOUR FRUIT TREES THIS MONTH.

The agricultural extension service desires to call the attention of deciduous fruit growers and home orchardists to the importance of providing deciduous fruit trees with an ample supply of soil moisture during the months of September and October. Fruit bud differentiation is occuring at this time, and if the trees suffer from lack of moisture they will have weak fruit buds for next season's crop.

Many orchards have been observed where the trees are evidencing distress from lack of moisture, and borings in many orchards have indicated that the soil moisture content is getting very low. This is the critical season of the year for deciduous fruit trees, and permitting the trees to suffer from lack of moisture at this time cannot be offset by good pruning, adequate pest control or any other measures. In fact, permitting the trees to suffer during the period when fruit buds are being formed will largely vitiate whatever results might have been secured through improved pruning. Growers are therefore warned against permitting the soil to become too dry.

Keep the implements under cover during the rainy season.

LIVE STOCK SHOW OUTSTANDING FEATURE OF RIVERSIDE FAIR.

BY R. T. LYANS.

WITH an outstanding showing of livestock, the Southern California Fair, which came to a close on October 16, presented to the lover of good stock an array of animals that would look good in many shows of even greater prominence. Some of the classes were so well filled with good individuals that even a tenth place would have been a credit to the exhibitor. Judge W. H. Standish of Lyons, O., who placed the awards in the cattle classes, was very much impressed with the high standards which have been set by California breeders, and expressed regret that he could not give double the number of ribbons, strongly urging the need of allowing more places in a class than four. The horse classes, while not large, presented splendid type and quality, as did beef cattle classes. The dairy cattle classes were well filled, especially in the Holstein division, which had one hundred and thirty-six entries. In the swine classes the Berkshire, Duroc Jerseys, Hampshire and Poland China breeds were strongly represented, and Judge Carl P. Thompson of Stillwater, Okla., who placed the swine awards, reported the Berkshire show the strongest he had seen this year.

The beef breed exhibitors were the Dibble Estate of Santa Barbara and Frank E. Collier, of Wildomar, who showed Shorthorns; D. H. Ogden of Alpine, who had the only display of Herefords and F. F. Peabody and James Marwick, of Santa Barbara, who showed Aberdeen Angus. In the dairy breeds the Holsteins were represented by Maxwell Farms, Hollywood; Robert N. Clapp, Nuevo; Sierra Vista Stock Ranch, Perris; Fred Hartsook, Lankershim; Berylwood Stock Farm, Hueneme; Carl Ray, Lankershim; Santa Monica Dairy Co., Venice; Perle R. Penrose, Pomona; William H. True, Riverside; Bost & Johnson, Corona; E. R. Stalder, Wineville; E. G. Stinson, Orange; Chaffee Project Farm, Ontario; W. R. Elliot, Riverside; W. V. Mills, Ontario; Riverside County Farm, Riverside; Kenneth Berry of California Junior Republic, Chino; Harvey Frampton, Artesia; S. M. LaFollette, Rialto. Guernseys were shown by A. B. Humphrey, Escalon; Russell S. Cox, San Marcos; Windmere Farm, Chino; Adohr Stock Farm, Van Nuys; C. G. Wallace, A. A. Cook and J. A. Hamner. Jerseys were exhibited by J. E. Thorpe, Lockford; George W. Thomas & Son, Arlington; Cook's Jersey Dairy, Chino; Charles McClouth, Clearwater; J. W. Gaines, Clearwater; McMin and Ralston, Corona; M. Fortini, Orland; J. E. Wherrell, Riverside, and Harry Cook, Chino. A. MacMin, Phoenix, Ariz., and Mark Butterfield, Riverside, were the only exhibitors of Ayrshires. F. L. Hall of Perris showed Diary Shorthornes and Percheron horses. Other horse exhibitors were George P. Thompson of Bakersfield, who showed Belgians, the Dibble Estate, Santa Barbara, with Clydesdales and R. H. Rector of San Fernando, who showed Jacks.

Corriedale, Lincoln, Shropshire, Southdown and Border Leicester Sheep awards were given to the Corriedale Sheep Company of Hollister, H. W. Chaffee and W. A. Barber, Los Angeles; Rupert Barry and Thomas Bishop & Co., of Hollister; H. J. Andrews, James Johns, Hugh Ensor and H. T. Little.

Breeders represented in the swine classes were as follows: Durocs, Sierra Vista Ranch, Perris; W. V. Mong, Whittier; J. E. Thorpe, Lockeford; J. C. Craig, Owensmouth; Charnock Ranch, Hemet, and Frank Curtis, Chino. Berkshires were strongly represented by Italian Vineyard Company, Guasti; A. B. Humphrey, Escalon; Chester T. Johns, Ontario; Stella MacDillard, Etiwanda; F. L. Hall, Perris; D. J. Bastanchbury, La Habra; Harry Nelson, El Monte; William Beard, Cucamonga; R. S. Jones, Etiwanda; the Chaffee Union High School, Ontario. Breeders who received the awards in the Hampshire classes were the Fairbanks Ranch, Redlands; Dr. E. A. Newton, Lankershim; A. V. Bueil, Carpinteria; James Marwick, Santa Barbara; Carl J. Meiners, Ojai; Gwyn Thurmond, Saticoy; J. Gibson, San Jacinto, and Llano Vista Ranch, Perris. Exhibitors of Poland Chinas were Gatewood and Stevens, Fresno; Buckland and McNeil, Fresno; Thurman B. Irwin, Chino; N. N. Watts, Arlington; Johnson Brothers, San Diego; David H. Kelly, Corona; Glemmill & Son, Ontario; William Mays, Riverside; R. Robinson, Riverside; Albert Canahan, Riverside; Harold Anderson, Riverside; R. E. E. Babcock and F. W. Porter.

CLEAN CULTURE BEATS GARDEN INSECTICIDES.

BY W. A. WARD.

The writer does not wish to claim the "Hero Prize" suggested for gardeners by E. E. Johnson, in the October 2 issue of the Farm and Tractor Section of The Times, but does claim that clean and frequent cultivation, plus home made compost, will cure most garden ills, and will generally bring success without the use of insecticides and commercial fertilizers.

By following this rule, the great variety of vegetables grown by me in my back yard this season were a success. The garden, 45 by 80 feet in size, showed a profit of $150 over the cost of water and seed, which were the only expenses, no account being kept of the labor, which was counted healthful exercise, and paid for itself. The income was estimated from prices at which the surplus was sold, after a large quantity of the vegetables were used by two families and numerous friends. The corn, beans, tomatoes, Hubbard squash and cantaloupes produced an income of over $100, and the remaining twenty kinds did the rest. We chose from five to six different kinds of fresh vegetables daily for a period of six months, with Hubbard and banana squash, Boston pie pumpkin, chayotes and sweet potatoes holding over for the winter season.

By practicing clean culture for three successive seasons, insects were kept out, and by using [illegible]-made compost, no commercial fe[illegible] were needed, and the fertility a[illegible]l condition of the soil was improve[illegible]

It is the writer's experience that failure with any standard kind of vegetables is unnecessary in the climate and soils of the Los Angeles district. The soil of my garden is light adobe, which "sets" and becomes hard, if not cultivated soon after a rain or irrigation; but which, if properly cultivated, becomes friable, and responds quickly to the use of fertilizer.

Vigilance is the price of liberty, and is also the price of success in the home garden, and it is the writer's opinion that the man who does not love to see the sun rise, or who cannot cultivate the garden habit, had best not attempt to cultivate a garden, because work is needed each day to keep the garden coming on, and the early morning seems to be the most opportune time in which to do those things.

Rotation of crops and the application of compost to the newly planted vegetables are among the necessary things, and the almost daily raking of the exposed surface is needed to create a dust mulch, which conserves the moisture, increases fertility, and makes it unhealthy for cut-worms and bugs. Of course, water must be applied when needed, but by using the furrow system, which is the best and only practical way of irrigating, time is saved, assuming that the subsoil was well filled with water by winter rains or irrigation, or both, before planting.

Now is the time to prepare the soil by cultivating the surface and leveling the ground to receive the winter rains. Build check levees about six feet apart to hold the rain or irrigation water. The soil should be spaced or plowed in early winter, and again in February. Hoeing the surface before spading enables one to spade deeper, and to turn under the pulverized top soil, so that, when the surface is again cultivated, the entire seed-bed may be pulverized to a depth of from eight to nine inches. The spade, hoe and rake are the only tools needed for the back-yard garden, but these should be sharp, and have well polished blades and tines at all times.

MAKE HEAVY WINNING.

TULARE.—With an excellent and large exhibit the Merritt-Bowers Company, owners of the Tagus ranch in this county, came away from the State Fair at Sacramento with twenty-six prizes, of which eighteen were firsts, seven seconds and one third, all for horses, mares and mules. The list of first prizes won by the company in both the open and State classes follows: First and grand champion prize on Steveno, Belgian stallion, four years and over; first on Prince Leopold, Belgian stallion, two years and under three; first and grand champion on Raby 2nd, Belgian mare, two and under three; first on Melisaunde, Belgian mare, one year and under two; first on product of Nina; first on best stallion and three mares bred by exhibitor; first on best three mares, any age; first and grand champion on Princess Beauty M, shire; first on Jack, grade geldings; first on Eloise, grade mare; first on Pony Lady, in harness; first on Pony Lady, "musical chairs;" first on Jumbo, Jack stock, three years and over; first on Joe Warrior, Jack stock, thr[illegible] years and under; first on four-horse te[illegible] in harness; first on "best-for-Californ[illegible] bred" mules; first on best two Californi[illegible] bred mules; first on Keno, "musical chairs."

Patch Budding.

and for this reason large limbs are not as desirable as small ones to place buds on.

The success of the union of the patch bud and the stock depends largely upon the approximate equality in the thickness of the bark on the stock and the patch bud. When the bark is thicker on the stock than on the patch bud it is necessary to take a knife and pare the bark down to the same thickness as the bark on the patch bud. Before removing the patch from the stock, pare the bark down not only on the patch but also the surrounding bark so that it will gradually slope down to the thickness of the patch to be used. The reason this is done is to enable the patch bud to be more securely bound in place. Great care should be taken in paring this bark down not to penetrate the bast cells in the inner white bark.

The buds for top-working large limbs are cut and tied the same as they are for nursery stock, also the forcing out and aftercare is practically the same.

Patch budding can be used on most any kind of tree that has bark that can be worked in the same way as the nut trees. I have used patch buds successfully on persimmon and mulberry trees as well as nut trees.

My experience has been that one or two buds or grafts placed in the proper place on a tree will give much better results than a large number of buds or grafts put in all over the top of a tree.

Plant beets, turnips, lettuce, chard, carrots, cabbage, onions, spinach and radishes in October and November for a winter garden.

MODERN TOOLS OF FARMING EXHIBITED.

A dozen makes of tractors were shown in the tractor, truck and implement tent at the recent Riverside Fair and these, with other equipment displayed, made a most comprehensive exhibit of modern agricultural appliances. The power farming idea was emphasized throughout and enough machines of various kinds were exhibited in operation to make this one of the liveliest sections of the fair.

The tractors shown were the International, Cletrac, Holt, Samson, Best, Trundaar, Rumely Oil Pull, Fordson, Aero and a new unnamed, four-wheel-drive machine being perfected by a Riverside inventor. Some of the exhibitors showed two or more models or sizes of tractors and there were a number of cutaway machines that gave the visitor an opportunity to study mechanism in detail.

The implements shown included well-known lines and tools for a variety of purposes. Irrigation was emphasized in the number of pump displays. Emphasis was also placed on the use of trucks on farms, a number of concerns showing these power vehicles in different sizes designed for farm service.

Many appliances designed for farm use were also shown in the industries tent.

NEW MARKETING EXCHANGE.

SANTA BARBARA.—Under the direction of Farm Adviser D. T. Batchelder a marketing exchange for farmers of the county has been organized, bringing to completion investigations into the subject which have been carried on for some months. The county marketing exchange will operate under by-laws and constitution similar to those upon which the State market federation is operated and will be a nonstock, nonprofit organization. The organizers have named as a board to draft the articles of incorporation: J. J. Hollister, W. S. Main, Alex Main, J. C. Burchardi, E. W. Stowe and L. L. Fox, each a farmer, the board as a whole representing the entire county. The exchange will conduct both buying and selling operations for the members. The sales department will handle only such products as cannot be disposed of through other co-operative organizations. Hay and grain will be the principal products handled at first, but truck crops and possibly live stock will be added, as the demand is developed. The buying department will confine itself mainly to the purchase of farm machinery and sprays and other essentials used in general farm work, but no attempt to compete with merchants in the handling of groceries and household goods will be attempted.

Citrus white fly, infesting a shipment of cut zinnias from the State of Louisiana, was recently intercepted and destroyed by Inspector M. W. Sweigart at Whittier. The package was shipped by parcels post, and was disposed of under the provisions of the State quarantine law.

Isolate all affected birds to quarters that can be cleaned easily, thus avoiding the possibility of other chicks or fowls from coming in contact with the ova or worms coughed up or passed in the excrement of those affected. Burn the bodies, or at least the heads and necks, of the infected birds that die. Scald the feed troughs and water dishes, and disinfect the houses, yards and coops. A milk antiseptic, such as a 2 per cent potassium permanganate may be used in the drinking water. It is advisable to treat the contaminated ground with air-slacked lime, and then spade it under.

T 35 Tractor

READY FOR DELIVERY NOV. 1st
Deliveries of the T 35 model begin Nov. 1st.
Limitations of production make it advisable to book your order at once, even if you do not want immediate delivery.

For four years Holt experience and skill have been devoted to the production of this wonderful little tractor. During that time Holt has designed, built and discarded small tractor models that surpassed existing standards but fell short of the high ideal Holt had set for a small "Caterpillar" Tractor.

To limit size without sacrificing power; to lessen weight without imperiling strength; to maintain, above all, the Holt standard of economical, dependable, long-lived performance—that was the Holt ideal. Correct design and the development of new qualities of steels and better methods of heat-treatment made this achievement possible.

Model T 35 "Caterpillar" Tractor is new, but new to the public only. It has been tried, tested and proven. It possesses, in fullest degree, all those qualities that have made the name "Caterpillar" supreme in the tractor world.

"Caterpillar" T 35 Tractor is only 48 inches wide and 52 inches high, weighs but 4000 pounds, yet develops a liberal surplus of power over its 14 drawbar-horsepower rating. It is of marvelously simple design, easy handling, all working parts fully enclosed yet readily accessible.

You will want full information regarding this latest Holt achievement—a postcard or letter request brings it to you—write today.

Some Timely Hints On Home Strawberry Culture.

BY ROSS H. GAST.

TIME was when the ambitious home gardener had but a few square feet to cultivate and fuss over. The space between the woodshed and the clothesline was planted to beets; that between the garage and the ever-present orange tree grew fine radishes, and just off the back porch, a few points to the starboard of the family garbage can, three rows of White Rose spuds blossomed and were consumed.

Now the best of the home garden tribe have moved out into the open, where they have ample space for gardens, and in some cases accommodation for a cow and chickens. Although we do not hear as much about the home gardens as we did during war times, there was produce raised during the past season to twice the value of the product of the corresponding season of either 1918 or 1919.

And the same gardeners have passed the "radish, turnin and lettuce" stage. They no longer stop at raising "easy" vegetables, but delve into the game, and bring forth choice artichokes, celery, and other fancy products. Truly, though we hear no more of the home garden "craze," we have never become sane since the war, and from the looks of things, this fall, we are getting worse every season.

Bunch of Carolina strawberries, ready for planting.

Make ridges 18 inches across and eight inches high for strawberries. Growth the first summer.

The first crop, in the early spring of second year.

In full bearing, the second summer.

The Shasta Banner strawberry, development of the native California berry.

It is my opinion that every suburbanite, and many of the regular "city fellers," should have a strawberry plot. Nothing else produces such satisfying results from a minimum of labor. One man I know, down in a prosperous subdivision, planted a plot a year ago last spring, and was the happiest mortal alive this summer. Strawberries from his own garden and milk from his own Bossie were two of his ambitions. He achieved them both this year. He had a plot, 25 by 25 feet, which bore many quarts of berries, besides those which he consumed for his breakfasts.

As to the culture of strawberries, gardeners differ somewhat. So I will tell you how they are planted and cared for in the fields down around Lomita and Gardena. You cannot go wrong when you imitate the commercial grower, for every move he makes must count for something. He must be right, financially and otherwise, or he loses his crop and cash.

Spade up a plot as large as you can spare, working in some well-rooted stable manure, if it is possible to obtain it. Of course you have learned to soak up the plot you wish to spade, so as to be able to prepare a seed bed properly. With your hoe, run up ridges about eight inches high and two feet or more apart. After this is done, run the water through the rows, between the ridges, to firm them down. Then you are ready for the plants.

As to varieties, try the Brandywine, the Aroma, the Carolina, or the Klondyke. Some gardeners recommend the Gibson for home plots. The commercial growers buy many of their plants from the East, but that is not necessary for the home. Year-old plants are best, but they are not absolutely necessary. You can purchase plants at almost any seed house. They are now on the market. A tip to those who get about the country with the flivver on Sunday—the Jap growers are thinning out the fields about now, and they will give you plants for the asking. Heel them in for a few months, then set them in the bed.

In foothill sections, on sandy soil, and where there is good air drainage, strawberry plants set out now will make growth during the winter and produce a small crop in spring. During the summer they will get a good growth, and bear heavily the following spring. In flat sections, on heavier ground, strawberry plants should be set out in March, but now is the time to lay out the plot for them in the latter districts, and to spade in the fertilizer. Spade again in the spring, and run out the ridges. Commercial growers set the plants farther apart in the rows than is necessary in the home plot, where the plants will get more individual care. Set them about eighteen inches apart, and keep the runners down during the first summer, and the lower stems thinned out. Water them thoroughly after planting, and mulch them carefully. Do not allow any soil to remain in the crown of the plant.

It takes approximately thirteen months for the plants to come into bearing. So if you plant next spring, you will have a nice crop of berries the following year, and they will last from March till June, and will yield a second crop, if well cared for. The berries ripen earlier in lighter soils than in the adobe, but the adobe is a very good berry soil nevertheless. Most of the Los Angeles county berry soils are clay or heavy type soils.

Klondyke strawberry, a good variety for the home garden.

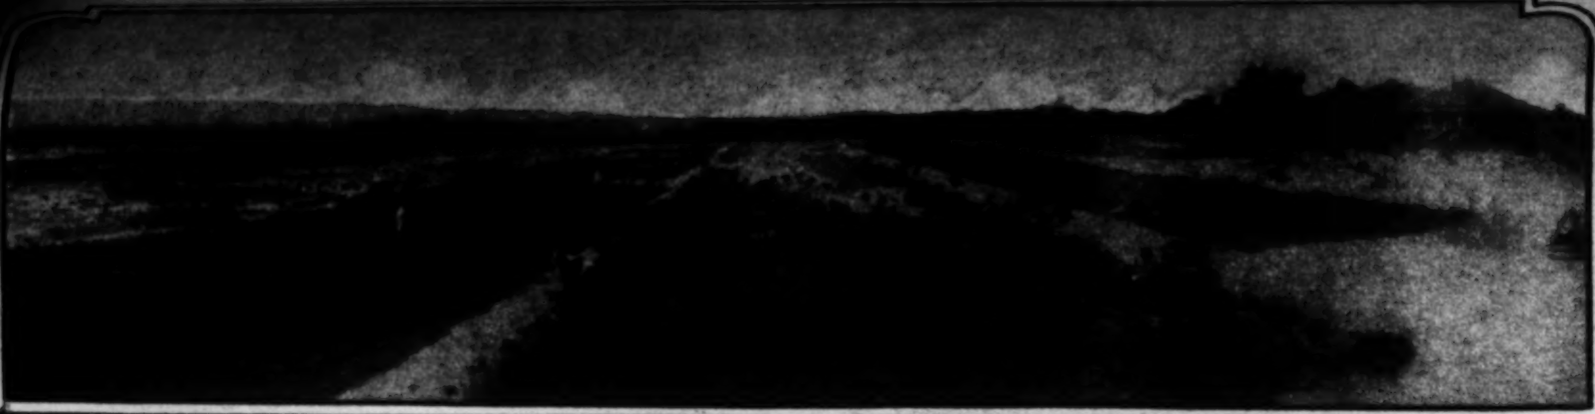
Irrigate and cultivate between the rows every ten days during the summer, and when the cold weather begins, and before the first rain, mulch the plants with straw. The straw saves them from damage from the frost and rain. Clean culture is of prime importance in the growing of the strawberry.

There are several plant diseases and pests that attack the strawberry. The leaf spot or blight is detected by white spots with purple borders onthe berry leaves. The fungus passes the winter on dead leaves, so these should be gathered and burned. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture is quite effective against it. If the roots become affected, use less water, and improve your drainage. Do not let the mention of these pests frighten you. I tell you of them so that you may know what to do in case any of them visit you.

For our ancient enemy, the aphis, spray with 40 per cent nicotine sulphate, or Black Leaf 40. Spray with Bordeaux to get rid of the flea beetle, and if you should be as unfortunate as to attract the crown borer, take up and burn the infested plants as soon as you discover them. Watch your plants closely and spray them occasionally with Bordeaux and you will have no trouble from the pests.

It is interesting to know that the native California strawberry, Fragaria californica, is remarkable for its deep roots and drouth resistance. It has been the subject of much experimentation, and has been crossed with many varieties to obtain new berries.

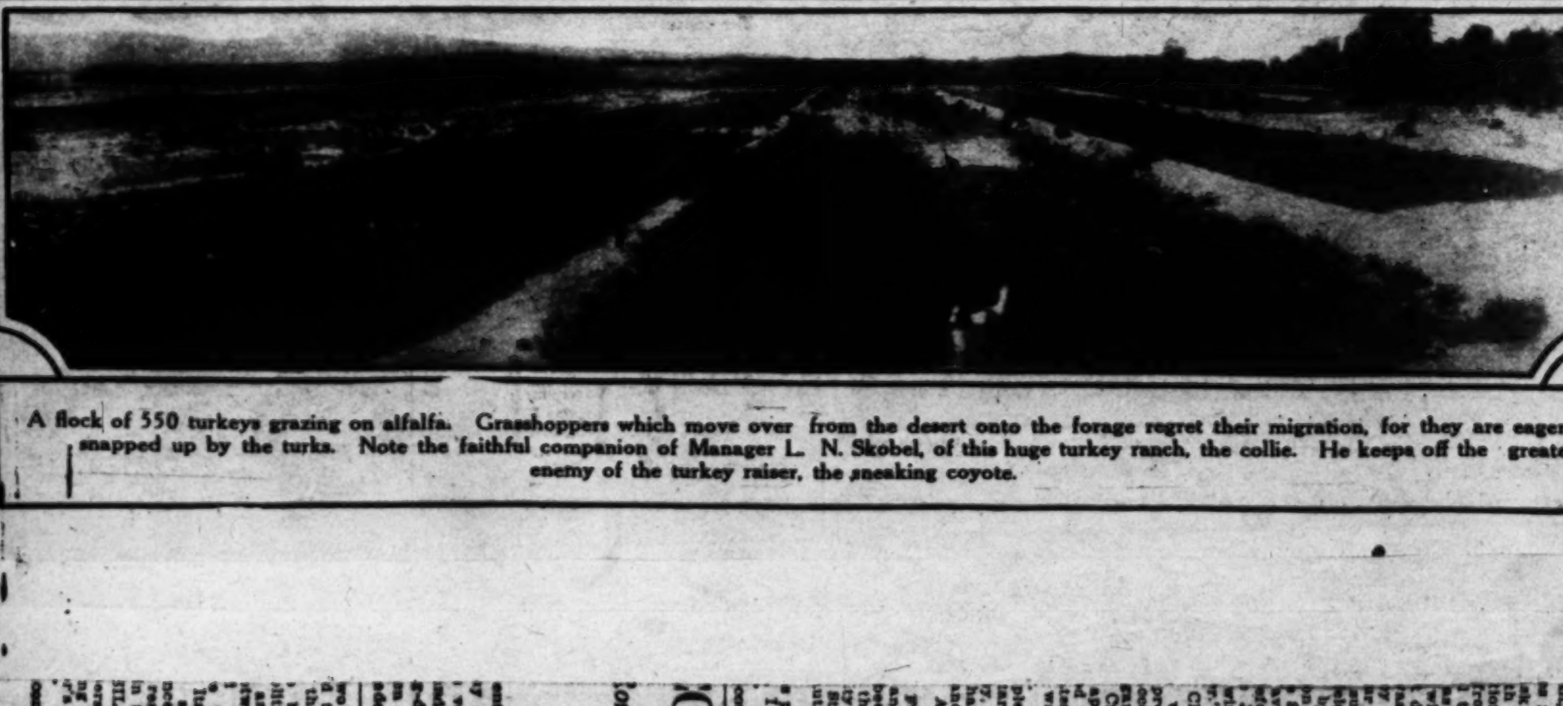
You will take out everything you put into a bed of strawberries. Nothing that you could plant in your garden will give more satisfaction, and you will be repaid many times, financially and otherwise. Have a conference with friend wife, and chose the spot where the strawberries are to bloom. Then eat a hearty breakfast and man the spade.



Vivid patches of green, dotted here and there in Silver Valley, on the Mojave Desert, hold some of the largest flocks of turkeys in the West. Here is the ranch of L. N. Skobel and Haimut Bros. These men have 800 turkeys on alfalfa range this year.

Showing that this fertile oasis produces something besides alfalfa, here are patches of corn, pumpkins, melons and other garden truck, all raised so that the main business of raising turkeys may go on uninterrupted. Note the irrigation pipe at the left. Silver Valley farmers are practical men.

A hawk's eye view of the Skobel-Haimut Ranch, showing how the sagebrush envelope the irrigated area in sharp outline. Dots in the center of the picture represent turkeys, raised from Bronze hen of pedigreed lineage.



A flock of 550 turkeys grazing on alfalfa. Grasshoppers which move over from the desert onto the forage regret their migration, for they are eagerly snapped up by the turks. Note the faithful companion of Manager L. N. Skobel, of this huge turkey ranch, the collie. He keeps off the greatest enemy of the turkey raiser, the sneaking coyote.

CARE OF THE BODY.

able to exert upon national affairs medical that influence which they could and should have exerted long ago.

"William J. Mayo says that doctors exert and possess no political influence, and it would be a bold man who would antagonize any comment of that thoughtful writer. Yet, it seems to us the political success of the Professional Guild, as operated in the State of New York for the past two years, ushers in a new era, in which the spineless medical profession, hitherto sound asleep or lethargically indifferent to their own legislative status, has at last seen the 'Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin,' and decided that no modern Cyrus shall exterminate them politically. We think we see several signs of the political awakening of our profession, but such should not lull us into any false sense of security, since the age-old ineptitude of the profession, so far as business or politics are concerned, cannot be overcome in a day or a generation. In other words, believe not that we are awakened, we are only beginning to be awakened. . . .

"The signs are pointing toward the establishment in our national mechanism of a Department of Public Health, as outlined more completely elsewhere in this number, and with all the indications at present that Dr. Charles H. Mayo will be the first secretary of health. (Dr. Mayo is an ex-president of the A.M.A.—Ed.) This selection, if actually made, would be almost ideal, as Dr. Mayo is a man of such depth and breadth of view that we can rest assured that the tendency of the present United States Public Health Service (now under the Treasury Department) toward Socialism and Bolshevism in medicine will cease. . . ."

"Socialism and Bolshevism in medicine" means, of course, all who do not belong to the stuffing, drugging and carving school.

The "Melting Pot."

THE "melting pot" idea of America is largely a fallacy.

Unfortunately, when you mix good and bad material, it does not average up well.

So long as our immigration was mainly from Northern Europe, it was all right. Now, our national character is being changed—and not for the better.

If we are to preserve this great nation for democracy, we must guard our gates.

Unrestricted immigration brought about the downfall of ancient empires.

Protection against foreign cheap laborers is much more important than protection against the product of foreign cheap labor.

A New Drug.

NUMEROUS addicts to a new synthetic drug concoction, known as paraldehyde, not covered either in the Harrison Federal narcotic law or the sanitary code drug law of New York City, are reported to have developed among former service men and others. The drug is being used in large quantities as a substitute for whisky, by men who are becoming hopeless addicts.

The old story. In this strenuous age of unnatural strife men will have some stimulant or narcotic.

There are worse evils than alcohol.

Diabetes.

FOLLOWING is from Physical Culture:

"Diabetes can be gotten rid of, if one wishes to do the right thing. It is a very simple matter, when you understand it. The only reason why diabetics used to die, and why the doctors said the disease was incurable, was because they were a million miles off the track, in their notions as to its cause and nature. They thought it was a sugar disease, and they prescribed meat. It is, if anything, a meat disease, a matter of protein excess. The Germans found that when the great blockade compelled them to stop eating meat, their diabetic patients, instead of dying, got well. In the new light now thrown upon the subject, diabetes is seen to be a development of acidosis, the latter being one form of autointoxication."

In the same magazine R. L. Alsaker, M.D., writes:

"Only a few years ago diabetes was considered an incurable disease, which it is not. Then some doctor had a brilliant idea that if we stopped giving the diabetics sugar and starchy food, and fed them whisky, coffee, large amounts of lean meats and other animal foods, they would stop manufacturing excessive amounts of sugar. Like many other splendid ideas the only defect of this one is that when put into practice it does more harm than good. Within Bright's disease, due to the increased acidity produced by living on an excessive amount of animal foods, plus the irritation coming from the liquor, coffee and the end-products of animal putrefaction within the body."

In other words, a natural diet will cure any disease that is curable

Chiropractic.

CHIROPRACTORS of California will make another attempt, in 1922, to pass an initiative measure, regulating the practice of chiropractic, and creating a State board of chiropractic examiners. An initiative petition, containing 25,158 names from Los Angeles county, has been filed with Secretary of State Jordan.

Two attempts have been made by the chiropractors to pass a similar measure through direct vote, while several attempts have been made to have the Legislature pass such a law.

The recipe for perpetual ignorance is to be satisfied with our conclusions and content with our knowledge.—[Prof. B. J. Jones.

Radium, King of Cures

There are only two kinds of RADIUM, namely: RADIUM SULPHATE and RADIUM BROMID. RADIUM SULPHATE is the only one sold directly to the sick, having in it Genuine RADIUM Metal Element, so necessary to preserve the power of Energy and to reach the germ of deep seated, malignant diseases.

RADIUM SULPHATE cleans out disease of Rheumatism, Kidney, Tuberculosis, Appendicitis, Spine, Catarrh, Asthma, Insomnia, Eczema, Tumors, Ulcers, Nervousness, Pyorrhoea, Rectum, Prostate, Psoriasis, Cancers, Blood Poisoning of every type, female affections, dropsy, hay fever, heart, stomach, liver, bladder, neuralgia and all other diseases that cause suffering, and it rejuvenates the tired, worn, debilitated people of all ages, strengthening every organ of the body and making them feel twenty years younger!

We give a money back guarantee, if not satisfied, on tuberculosis and cancer, the two most difficult of all to cure; all other affections being easily cleaned out by it. It is applied one hour each day. Every phase of the two considered, it is a better RADIUM than that discovered by Mme. Curie. It has been proven in this city that $15 worth of it will cure more and severer diseases than $50,000 worth of Mme. Curie's RADIUM discovery at their respective selling prices; and it is a harmless, nonsurgical cure for all operable diseases. It does not waste; guaranteed to retain its curative properties ten years. "You will not get beat this time." That is our slogan, and it is as true as the sun shines.

"Down to the Sea in Ships."

—BY—
John Steven McGroarty.

IT IS a different thing, altogether, to go down to the sea in ships than it is to wander in caravans upon land.

You might think that this is a thing that goes without saying. And, of course, so it is. But, for all that, there is many a man who does not reckon with it when he has gotten a loan from God and has fared forth to spend it.

And with us it was that way, surely.

Not for a moment had we reckoned when we left the green Verdugo Hills and had fared forth to spend our loan from God that it is a different thing entirely to wander in caravans over mountains and through valleys than it is to go down to the seas in ships and to be borne across endless billows in the sweep of running tides.

We have a loan from God, we had said. And we shall fare forth to spend it. And what difference can it make whether we spend it by land or by sea?

That's what we said to ourself in our vast innocence and unsophistication when we fared forth from the green Verdugo Hills that time on a golden summer day which now seems to have been ages and ages ago.

And, by gollies, now that we have had the experience, we want to tell you that if a man be what is called a "land lubber" he wants to think twice, as the saying is, before he takes his foot from terra firma and steps on a ship borne across the wild waves of an ocean.

For, as likely as not, he will be sorry that he did it. And, he will make a vow that he will never do it again.

Not that we say this as far as we are concerned. It has not bothered us a bit. We have the blood of sailor ancestors in our veins. And there is everything in this theory of heredity—say what you will about it.

On the ship in which we went to sea, and which has carried us so blithely and so buoyantly across the great ocean, we have seen men and women dying, as it seemed, a thousand deaths from seasickness.

You would wonder why they do it. They, themselves, say they do it for pleasure—the pleasure of being able to say they have seen Europe. So; in order to be able to say they have been "abroad," not only will they endure these awful upheavals of their poor, distracted stomachs, but they will pay out large sums of money, as well.

It is a queer world when you come to look it over. And all is vanity, as the preacher said.

On the ship in which we have sailed out of the great harbor of New York we have seen so many people so deadly sick of the sea that it is beyond belief they will ever again be able to bear even the mere smell of it.

But, as we have said, we were very joyous of it ourself. The blood of old sailormen sang in our veins every league of the way.

The Never-ending Wonder and Beauty of the Sea

WE CAN remember well that we used to dream of the sea when we were a boy among the old blue hills of home. Dreaming that we would some day cross its foaming billows and look upon the lands that lie beyond it.

And now, after the long years, the dream has come true. And it is good to have a dream come true.

It were impossible for us to even attempt to describe our emotions as day by day and night by night we fared with sun and wind and rain, and with wandering stars, upon the bosom of these vast deeps.

> "Break, break, break
> On thy cold, gray crags, O sea—
> And would that my tongue could utter
> The thoughts that arise in me."

The sea that has loosed so many tongues of poets, with old blind Homer at their head. The sea that has locked in its depths the pride of man and his insolent armadas. The sea in which Judas is given his one day of mercy in the year until God shall call it back and roll the heavens as a scroll.

It was upon a modern steamship that we sailed, but we were thinking of old ships always, and of old sailormen, when we crossed the great ocean. For many an hour we hung across a starboard rail as great stars sank and faded in the dim night skies, watching for the ghosts of old sailormen and their long forgotten sails.

And always the wonder and the beauty of the sea was upon us.

It is the same sea over which Columbus sailed more than four centuries ago. Columbus, who was the first to steer its trackless wastes; the first to dare its uncharted tides.

We dreamed a long time about Columbus and his ships one night at sea when the stars were low and the voices of the past whispered to us at the starboard rail.

Sailing in his little tubs of ships, daring this wild sea that no man had ever dared before, sailing on and on with dauntless soul to seek and find a new world that no one believed existed, save himself—is it any wonder that history holds him in its embrace, immortal, and as its dearest memory?

For two long months his little galleons were buffeted by winds and waves and tides between his port of Spain and the palm-fringed shores of San Salvador. And now the steamships cross in six days.

Yet, sometimes, the ships cannot cross, even now. Sometimes this same sea that Columbus dared in his little tubs reaches up and draws down to its depths some great leviathan.

We thought of that midst the wonder and the beauty of the sea when we were told we were crossing the very spot where the Titanic went down.

How many have been the tragedies of this sea, and what great tales it has to tell.

We dreamed of all this when the stars were low above the starboard rail and the night winds were full of the whispers of ancient voices.

These dreams of the sea that had been with us always from our cradle. And that were now come true.

The Path of the Wanderers Who Made America Great.

WHETHER or not it be true that the Pacific is the ocean of tomorrow, there can be no dispute as to the fact the Atlantic is the ocean of yesterday.

It was over the sea-paths of the Atlantic that came the peoples who made America great. And it thrills a man to the very soul to think of them.

One whole day we sat on a deck of our ship and talked of nothing else but that. It was with an American we talked—a man whose ancestors had traded strings of beads with Indians for lands in America long before George Washington was born.

He is a man who has crossed the Atlantic many times, to and fro, but he said he had never before thought of this—that when he crossed the Atlantic he was wandering upon sea-paths over which had come the peoples who had made America great.

And the way that the talk came about was that this man was complaining of what he called "the unhappy changes" that have taken place in New York, the city of his birth.

The Glory of Ships.

The glory of ships is an old, old song, since the days when the sea-rovers ran,
In their open boats through the roaring surf, and the spread of the world began;
The glory of ships is a light on the sea, and a star in the story of man.

When Homer sang of the galleys of Greece that conquered the Trojan shore,
And Solomon lauded the barks of Tyre that brought great wealth to his door,
'Twas little they knew, those ancient men, what would come of the sail and the oar.

The Greek ships rescued the West from the East, and they harried the Persians home,
And the Roman ships were the wings of strength that bore up the empire, Rome;
And the ships of Spain found a wide new world, far over the fields of foam.

Then the tribes of courage at last saw clear that the ocean was not bound,
But a broad highway, and a challenge to seek for treasure as yet unfound,
So the fearless ships fared forth to search, in joy that the globe was round.

Their hulls were heightened, their sails spread out, they grew with the growth of their quest;
They opened the secret doors of the East, and the golden gates of the West;
And many a city of high renown was proud of a ship on its crest.

The fleets of England and Holland and France were at strife with each other and Spain;
And battle and storm sent a myriad ships to sleep in the depths of the main;
But the seafaring spirit could never be drowned, and it filled up the fleets again.

HENRY VAN DYKE.

New York is no longer an American city, he said. It is run by the Sons of Erin and owned by the Children of Israel. He said that the statue of Gen. Washington at the subtreasury, or even the statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island, no longer means anything. That the very traditions of old Manhattan, not to speak of it as New Amsterdam, are gone and forgotten. It is an island crowded now to its edges with Irish and Jews and Germans, with Italians, Scandinavians and every peoples under the sun except Americans. And he seemed to feel very badly about it.

MAGAZINE—EDITORIAL M GOFF

That was the way the talk came up about the Atlantic being the path over which had come the peoples who had made America great. This same Atlantic Ocean across which was sailing the ship in which we ourselves were now voyaging.

Upon these same billows pitched and heaved and rolled the ships that bore the Italian Columbus and his Spanish crew, we said. And the ships of Lief Ericson, the Scandinavian. The ships of the French, the Teutons, the Saxons and all. And it was they, and the sons of them, that made America—East, West, South and North—great.

We pointed to the horizon from the deck of our ship. Perhaps it was just there that the Mayflower passed on her way from Plymouth Harbor to Plymouth Rock, we said. Perhaps it was just there that Paul Jones sailed the Constitution with Old Glory nailed to the mast. It was surely upon these very pathways of the sea that came the innumerable hosts that every land gave to the ships that there might be, at last, one great and only country.

And so it was that we talked together that long day on the wind-swept deeps—two men of that "one and only country," speaking of its greatness and its glory.

And, as we spoke together then, and the twilight fell, and darkness came down with its vast and solemn loneliness upon the deep, we no longer felt ourselves to be on a waste of waters, but, instead, upon pathways glorified by the faith and suffering and sacrifices of those who had hewn our country with its glory out of primeval forests, and who had, with strong arms and tireless hands, reared the rafters of the State.

There is no one in America who has not a right to be there, we said. It was everybody's country, and is so still.

There was a man on the dock at New York when our ship was sailing who said we would have a very pleasant voyage.

What he meant was that we would have fine weather "across," as the saying is. It seems that there is in every place a man like that—a man who knows how the weather is going to act. The government has a number of them, too. And often—maybe once in every seven years—they make a good guess.

Well, sir, if it had not been for one day and one night that our ship passed through on the voyage, this man at the dock in New York would have ranked in our estimation with the prophets. For, the voyage proved to be a very pleasant one, indeed.

Except for that one day and one night above mentioned.

And that one day and one night we shall not forget though we were to live a thousand years. During those twenty-four hours we beheld the awful anger of the sea. We had often read of storms at sea. Both in prose and in poetry we had read of them. Also we had seen them filmed in the movies as the same are produced by the uncanny geniuses of our beloved Hollywood and Culver City. And we had heard them described in lectures.

But, we know now that we had never been sufficiently informed or impressed by any of these avenues of information concerning a storm at sea.

And, as it happened, this particular storm at sea through which we passed, and of which we now speak, was one of the worst storms ever known on the Atlantic Ocean since the time the first sailorman made its acquaintance.

At least that's what the captain of our ship said, maybe that is what he always says to his passengers about every storm. But, I don't think he was lying in this particular instance. He is a big man with a red face, but when this storm was over his clothes hung on him loose and baggy and he was as pale as a ghost.

As for ourself, we pray God we shall never see the like of it again.

But, then, on the other hand, now that it is all over with, we are glad we had the experience. For it is a good thing for a man to be made to understand what a futile and a helpless thing he is, after all. It takes the bluster and the conceit out of him to go through a storm at sea.

There we were out upon the vast wastes of the waters as helpless as babes. The ship, itself—and it is a good ship; it must be a good ship to have weathered such a storm—was tossed on the angry billows like a cork. The wind blew in maddening gales—with a fury terrifying beyond all words to express. There were vivid lightning flashes and crashes of thunder. And the rain whipped the seas to frenzy.

After long hours—hours that seemed interminable and never to end, the lightning, the thunder and the rain ceased. But the wind did not cease. All night long it drove across the seas in a tireless fury. And the moon shone clear and cold then from the sky so that we could see the desperate battle that the ship was in.

Down, down into yawning chasms of water plunged the ship, as though it could never hope to rise again. Yet, rise it would, as by a miracle—each time as by a miracle and in no other way. Then, up, up, on billows that were like mountains, she rode to swing and toss against the very sky, apparently at the mercy of the sea. Then down, down again into those awful depths.

"It is a good ship," the captain said when all was over. A good ship, indeed. And we who lived within it, and whom it carried into safe harbors, will say forever that it is a good ship. And also great is the mercy of God.

It was off the banks of Newfoundland that the storm took place. Off the banks of Newfoundland where the Titanic and a thousand other ships went down.

All's Well and Over the Sea Lies Spain

AS WE write these words in a sheltered nook of our good ship, and look out upon the sunny waters, it is difficult to think that it is the same sea that held us in its terrors such a little while since.

A strange thing is the sea. So soft and fair and gentle it can be, and yet turn so suddenly awful and cruel, so mad and treacherous.

God be with all brave sailors. Keep them in thy care, dear God.

And now it is so wonderful and so inexpressibly beautiful again—this whimsical sea. And it is haunted wit old chanteys that have been sung upon its billows sinc time that no man remembers. Since time when th Phoenician first dared it, and maybe long before. Ther is no man to say how long.

And, over the sea lies Spain. Soon shall we set ou wandering feet upon its highways, seeking the castle that we builded there in our dreams.

Tomorrow, maybe, or at least now very soon, w shall see the dim cliffs of England as we pass. An France will open its sunny gates for us, to let us i. It is an old, old dream—all this. And it is long tha we have waited for it to come true.

But, there are other thoughts with us, too, as w look out upon the sunny waters, and the lands of drea draw near. Thoughts of home and the green Verdug Hills. And the neighbors gathered under some dea rafter where it may be that we are well-beloved.

And thoughts also of the members of our big congr gation throughout our California of the South who rea this poor, blundering page on Sunday mornings.

After the storm and the stress, and the danger an the dark, it is of home and our own we are thinking the folks we love, and the sunset on the Ventur Mountains, and the lights of the foolish automobil flitting like fireflies up and down the Calabasas road.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren.

World Leaves Warren Undisturbed. An Amazing Message From the Spirit

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"NOW, dear, don't make cynical comments—try to be responsive." urged Helen as they entered the office building in which Mrs. Irene Moore held her Tuesday night spiritualistic meetings. "Let's go in a sympathetic mood."

"Well, you can supply the sympathy. Don't expect me to get lit up over this sort of thing," irritated at having been dragged there against his will.

"Mrs. Stevens says she's wonderful—she told her some marvelous things."

"Huh, she'd fall for anything," grunted Warren. "She's always chasing some new fad. Last year it was palmistry—now it's spiritualism."

The elevator not running, they climbed two flights of dimly lit stairs, and turned down the hall to an open door through which shone a strip of light.

It was a long, narrow room filled with rows of chairs. On the platform sat the medium—a stout, florid woman with heavy gray hair. On a table beside her were a bowl of flowers, a pitcher of water, a glass and two silver plates.

Warren, refusing to go up front, peremptorily waved Helen into the very last row, the chairs creaking loudly as they sat down.

The collection came first—the passing of the silver plates. Then the medium rose to make an announcement.

"For the benefit of those who have never been here before, I will state that my control is Little Lottie—a child of seven. When she questions you, please answer promptly as a child is apt to be impatient." Then bowing to a young woman on the front seat, "Now, Miss Ellis."

Crossing to the piano, Miss Ellis favored them with an unintelligible song in a shrill, metallic soprano, while Mrs. Moore sat with closed eyes, motionless except for an occasional twitching of her muscles.

"There are the Stevenses up front—the third row," whispered Helen.

As the last tortured note died away, and Miss Ellis returned to her seat, the medium gave a violent twitch and started up, still with closed eyes.

"Dood evenin' evvybody," in a child's piping treble. "My; I sees a lot of spirits here tonight—and they all wants to dive me messages for you. I'll do best I can. I knows you all wants to talk to your dear ones."

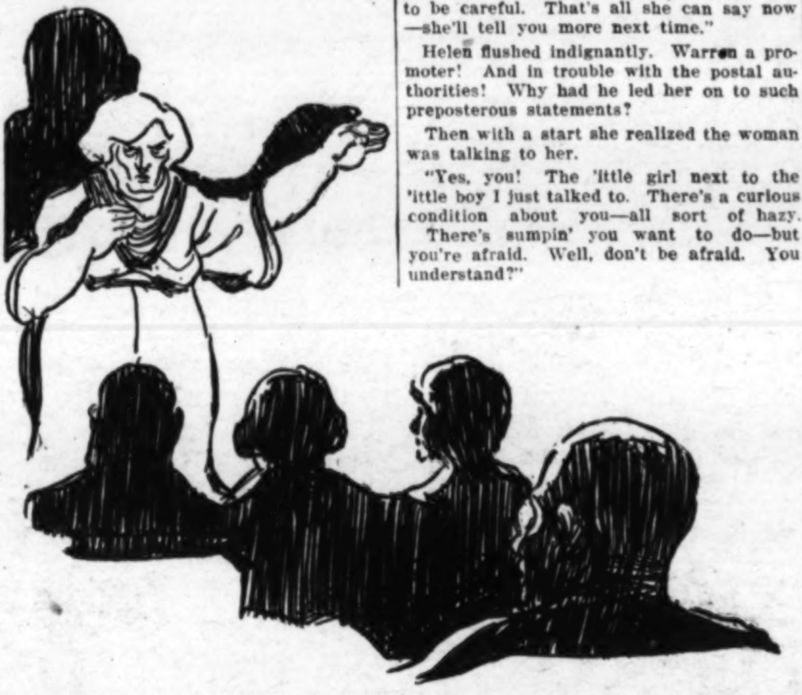
The medium had also assumed a child's mannerism. She was fidgeting and twisting her handkerchief.

"That 'ittle girl over by the wall," pointing to an elderly woman in the third row. "I's a message for you. Do you know Mary in the spirit world?"

The woman, leaning tensely forward, nodded a breathless, "Yes."

"She was young, wasn't she? No? Well, she looks young. And I gets a awful pain here," clasping her large, jeweled hand to her throat. "Didn't she pass out with sumpin' the matter with her throat?"

"Not that Iknow of," was the tremulous answer.



"Oh, yes, she did!" shrilly. "Oo-oo! It hurts me all down here." Then as there was no affirmative response, Little Lottie shrewdly shifted her ground. "You've some money trouble—you want to know what to do?"

"Yes—yes!" The woman's voice betrayed a pathetic eagerness.

"She says not to worry. I sees a figure 3—I dunno if it's 3 weeks or 3 months—but it's comin' out all right. She'll tell you more next time."

Waving both hands to dismiss that spirit and summon another, "Lottie" turned to the other side of the room.

"That 'ittle girl on the aisle," resuming the childish idiom from which she had lapsed somewhat. "A old gent'man is standin' right back of you."

"Me, Lottie?" chorused three women, all on the aisle.

"With the blue hat—yes, you! Oo-oo! I hurts all down my leg. He had rheumatism. My leg hurts sumpin' awful. Didn't he walk with a cane?"

The woman hesitated, evidently not able to place the spirit.

"He stoops and has gray hair. And he wants to tell you you mustn't worry. There's goin' to be a change in your affairs. You goin' to take a long trip somewhere. California, I think—yes, I sees the palm trees and booful flowers. Oh, I know now! You write for the movies?"

"I—I haven't yet—but I'd like to."

"Well, you will," brightly. "That's why you goin' to California—I see lots of papers. You writes and tears up—and then you write sumpin' you don't tear up—and it's goin' to bring you lots of money."

"Oh, thank you, Lottie, thank you.'

"Now, le's see. My! They's so many spirits here—I dunno which way to turn. Oh, yes, that 'ittle boy way back—they's some one here for him."

"Dear, she means you!" whispered Helen, nudging Warren excitedly.

"It's a tall old lady with gray hair. She's got on a black silk dress with white at the neck. She holds a big 'S' before her. Maybe your mother or a aunt——she don't say—but her name begins with 'S.' You know who I mean?"

"Yes," lied Warren to Helen's amazement.

"She wants to talk to you about your business. Don't you send out a lot of letters? And don't a lot of people write you and come to see you?"

Then encouraged by Warren's affirmative nod.

"You're a promoter, aren't you?"

Helen could hardly repress an audible gasp, as he repeated his obliging "Yes."

"You send out a lot of circulars through the mail. I see them folded three times in long envelopes. Well, this spirit says to be very careful what you say in those circulars so you won't get in trouble with the mail authorities. You understand what I mean?"

"I do."

"Well, thats all right, then—she just says to be careful. That's all she can say now—she'll tell you more next time."

Helen flushed indignantly. Warren a promoter! And in trouble with the postal authorities! Why had he led her on to such preposterous statements?

Then with a start she realized the woman was talking to her.

"Yes, you! The 'ittle girl next to the 'ittle boy I just talked to. There's a curious condition about you—all sort of hazy. There's sumpin' you want to do—but you're afraid. Well, don't be afraid. You understand?"

"I—I—don't think I do," faltered Helen.

"Well, you ought to," crossly. "You think about it when you get home. Didn't some one just try an' persuade you from sumpin you wanted to do?"

"Not that I know of," painfully conscious of many backward glances.

"Yes, they did!" with an impatience she always showed when contradicted. "Now I'm goin' to talk to somebody else. That 'ittle lady right here in front. You came to find out 'bout a young man. Yes, you did—you needn't blush. Well, he's very nice—but he's not the marryin' kind. Isn't that so?"

"I don't know," stammered the rather pretty blond, much embarrassed.

"Well, it's better to have a true friend than a fickle husband. And you're not satisfied with other conditions surrounding you? Isn't that so?"

The girl admitted that it was.

"They're going to improve. But be careful about signing any papers—I see the word 'insurance'." Then irrevelantly, "Don't your bed face east?"

"Why—no," after a moment's consideration. "It faces west."

"West? Wait a minute," her hand to her head. "Oh, yes, I was looking at the foot. That faces east—that's what I meant. Now, tonight, you turn it 'round so the head faces north. Your vibrations will be better."

Other readings, all padded with glittering generalities, followed. Always she touched on poor health and unsatisfactory financial conditions—that were soon to improve. Some Mary, John, or William from the spirit world was there to help almost every one.

If the messages were a little vague, more definite ones were promised for next week. And for the sum of $5 a private seance could be had in which more detailed and intimate advice would be given.

Even Helen squirmed a little over some of the most obvious evasions, and she had to keep nudging Warren to subdue his disgusted grunts.

"Wish I could play piano." Coyly sidling over to the instrument, "Lottie" fingered the keys. "I likes a piano. Don't that sound pitty?" pounding one note. "Well, I must go now. Be sure to come next Tuesday—I'll have more messages. Good-night, evvybody, good-night," waving her handkerchief.

"Good-night, Lottie," chorused several women, evidently habitues.

"Let's get out of here." Warren snatched up his hat and stick.

As they were in the last row, he was out in the hall before Helen could protest.

"Oh, it seems rude to go off without speaking to Mrs. Stevens," reluctantly following him down. "I'm afraid she'll be offended."

"She'd be a lot more offended if I told her what I thought of that performance. That Lottie stuff was too much for me!"

"Warren, why did you lead her on? Why did you keep saying 'yes?'"

"Wanted to see how far she'd go. She sized me up for a promoter—so I thought I'd help her along a bit."

"But it wasn't fair to mislead her," as they came out on the street.

"Fair! Why, the whole thing's bunk from start to finish. She isn't even a good actress. Half the time she forgot her baby talk. One minute she'd be babbling about the 'pitty lady'—the next she'd come out with some jaw-breakers. And her slang was up-to-the-minute."

"Yes, that wasn't very convincing—yet she did get some things right. That old man in front of us—she told him—"

"What'd she tell him? That he was in poor health and financial difficulties. I could've told him that much without ringing in Little Lottie."

"But that woman she told about the money coming from China—"

"Oh, she had a line on her—she'd been there before. You could tell that by the way she kept chirping, 'Yes, Lottie'—'Thank you, Lottie.'"

"But, dear, there must be something in it. Think of Sir Oliver Lodge, Conan Doyle—and all the really big people interested in spiritualism."

"I'm not talking about scientific investigators. But that show tonight was pretty raw. What did Lottie say to that blond—'better have a true friend than a fickle husband?' How's that for an infant prodigy? No wonder she's in the spirit world. Much too bright to live. Little Lottie must've 'passed out' with combustion of the brain!"

Makes Saw Musical.

Sam Moore, an English music hall artist, has succeeded in getting music from a carpenter's saw. He grips the saw handle between his knees, holds the tip of the saw in one hand, and works a violin bow with the other. The vibrating steel blade emits notes, the pitch of which is varied by changing the curvature of the blade.

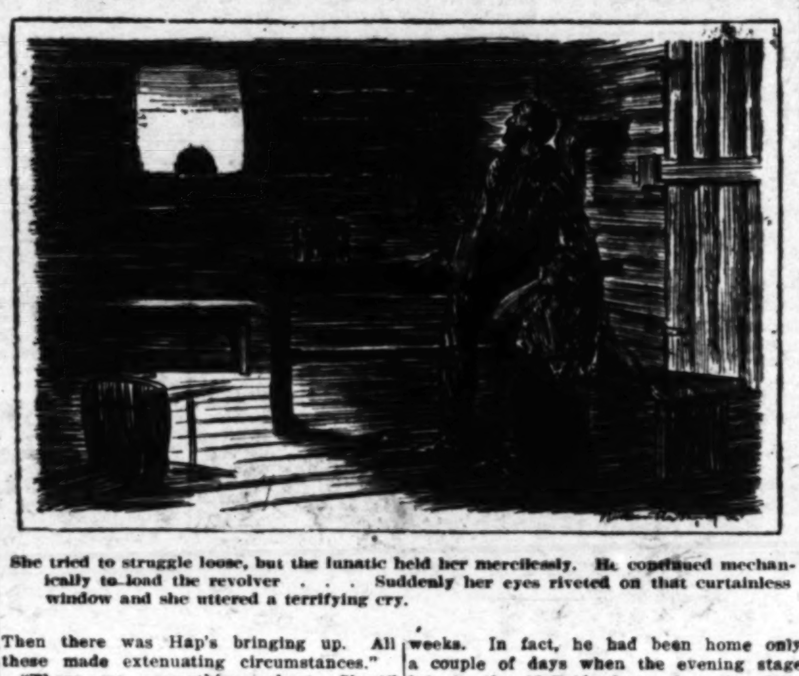
THE FACE IN THE WINDOW

By William Dudley Pelley.

(ILLUSTRATED BY NORMAN ANTHONY.)

A Young Wife—An Invalid Husband—The Need of Money—An Escaped Convict—The Offered Reward—Then Thrills and Thrills of Masterly Style.



She tried to struggle loose, but the lunatic held her mercilessly. He continued mechanically to load the revolver . . . Suddenly her eyes riveted on that curtainless window and she uttered a terrifying cry.

AT 8 O'CLOCK this morning Sheriff Crumpett entered our New England town postoffice for his mail. From his box he extracted a letter in a long yellow envelope that bore the return stamp of a prominent Boston lumber company. The old man hooked black-rimmed glasses on a big nose and tore a generous inch from the end of the envelope.

The first inclosure which met his eyes was a check. Impressed into the fabric of the safety-paper were the indelible figures of a protector. Not over five thousand ($5000) dollars.

The Sheriff read the name of the person to whom it was payable and gulped. His gnarled old hand trembled with excitement as he read the accompanying letter.

"Nov. 10, 1919.

"My Dear Sheriff:

"Inclosed please find my personal check for $5000. It is made out to Mrs. McBride. I am sending it to you for proper delivery. I feel, from your enthusiastic account of her recent experience, that it will give you pleasure to present it to her.

"Under the circumstances I do not begrudge the money. When first advised of Ruggam's escape, it was hot-headed impulse which prompted me to offer a reward so large. The old clan-blood of the Wileys must have made me murder-mad that Ruggam should regain his freedom permanently after the hellish thing he did to my brother.

"If this money is going to a woman to whom it will be manna from heaven—to use your words—I am satisfied. Convey to her my personal congratulations, gratitude and best wishes.

"Cordially yours,
"C. V. D. WILEY."

"Good old Chris!" muttered the sheriff. "He's rich because he's white." He thrust both check and letter back into the long envelope and headed for the local livery stable. He ordered a rig in which he might drive at once to the McBride house in the northern part of town.

Two weeks ago—on Monday, the 27th of the past October—the telephone bell rang sharply in our newspaper office a few moments before the paper went to press.

The connection was made, and over the wire came the voice of young Stewart, crisp as lettuce.

"Special dispatch . . . Wyndgate, Vt., October 27. . . . Ready?"

Stewart proceeded:

"'Hapwell Ruggam, serving a life sentence for the murder of Deputy Sheriff Martin Wiley at a Lost Nation kitchen dance two years ago, killed Jacob Lambwell, his guard, and escaped from prison at noon today.

"'Ruggam had been given some repair work to do near the outer prison gate. It was opened to admit a tradesman's automobile. As Guard Lambwell turned to close the gate, Ruggam felled him with his shovel. He escaped to the adjacent railroad yards, stole a corduroy coat and pair of blue overalls hanging in a switchman's shanty and caught the 12:40 freight up Green River.

"'Freight Number Eight was stopped by telegraph near Norwall. The fugitive, assuming correctly that it was slowing down for search, was seen by a brakeman fleeing across a pasture between the tracks and the eastern edge of Haystack Mountain. Several posses have already started after him, and sheriffs all through Northern New England are being notified.

"'Christopher Wiley, lumber magnate and brother of Ruggam's former victim, has offered a reward of $5000 for Ruggam's capture, dead or alive. Guard Lambwell was removed to a hospital, where he died at 1:30.' . . . All right?"

When the big Duplex was grinding out newsprint with a roar that shook the building, the boys and girls gathered around to discuss the thing which had happened.

"Ruggam," the editor explained, "is a poor unfortunate who should have been sent to an asylum instead of the penitentiary. He killed Mart Wiley, a deputy sheriff, at a Lost Nation kitchen dance two years ago."

"Where's the Lost Nation?"

"It's a term applied to most of the town of Partridgeville in the northern part of the county—an inaccessible district back in the mountains peopled with gone-to-seed stock and half-civilized illiterates. Ruggam was the local blacksmith."

"What's a kitchen dance?"

"Ordinarily a kitchen dance is harmless enough. But the Lost Nation folks use it as an excuse for a debauch. They gather in some sizable shack, set the stove out into the yard, soak themselves in aromatic spirits of deviltry and dance from Saturday night until Monday noon—"

"And this Ruggam killed a sheriff at one of them?"

"He got into a brawl with another chap. Some one passing saw the fight and sent for an officer. Mart Wiley was deputy, afraid of neither man, God nor devil. Hap Ruggam must have had help, because he first got Mart tied to a tree in the yard. Then Ruggam caught up a billet of wood and—and killed him with that."

"Why didn't they electrocute him?" demanded young Higgins.

"Well, the murder wasn't exactly premeditated. Hap wasn't himself; he was drunk—not even able to run away when Sheriff Crumpett took him into custody. Then there was Hap's bringing up. All these made extenuating circumstances."

"There was something about Sheriff Wiley's pompadour," suggested our little lady proofreader.

"Yes," returned the editor. "Mart had a queer head of hair. It was dark and stiff, and he brushed it straight back in a pompadour. When he was angry or excited, it actually rose on his scalp like wire. Hap's counsel made a great fuss over Mart's pompadour and the part it played in egging Hap on. The sight of it, stiffening and rising the way it did, maddened Ruggam so that he beat it down hysterically. It was all right to make the sentence life imprisonment, only it should have been in an asylum. Hap's not right."

By 8 o'clock that evening most of the valley's deer hunters, all of the local adventurers, and the usual quota of high school sons of thoughtless parents were off on the man hunt in the eastern mountains.

On reaching the timber line they separated. It was agreed that if any of them found signs of Ruggam, the signal for assistance was five shots in quick succession "and keep shooting at intervals until the rest come up."

In the northern part of our town, a mile out on the Wickford road, is the McBride place. It is a small white house with a red barn in the rear and a neat rail fence inclosing the whole. Six years ago Cora McBride was book-keeper in the local garage. Her maiden name was Allen. The town called her "Tomboy Allen." She was the only daughter of old Zeb Allen, for many years our county game warden. Cora, as we had always known her, was a full-blown, red-blooded, athletic girl who often drove cars for her employer.

Duncan McBride was chief mechanic in the garage repair shop. He was an affable, sober, steady chap, popularly known as "Dunk the Dauntless." When he married his employer's book-keeper, Duncan and the Allen girl motored to Washington in a demonstration car. On their return they bought the Johnson place, and Cora quickly demonstrated the same furious enthusiasm for homemaking and motherhood that she had for athletics and carburetors.

Three years passed, and two small boys crept about the yard behind the white rail fence. Then—when Duncan and his wife were "making a great go of matrimony" in typical Yankee fashion—came the tragedy. In the infantile-paralysis epidemic the McBrides suffered the supreme sorrow—twice. Those small boys died within two weeks of each other.

Troubles rarely come singly. One afternoon this past August, Duncan completed repairs on Doc Potter's runabout. When he cranked the machine to run it from the workshop, the "dog" on the safety-clutch failed to hold.

Duncan was taken to our memorial hospital with internal injuries and dislocation of his spine. He remained there many weeks. In fact, he had been home only a couple of days when the evening stage left in the McBride letter box the daily paper containing the story of Ruggam's "break" and of the reward offered for his capture.

Cora returned to the kitchen after obtaining the paper and sank wearily into a wooden chair beside the table.

As the headlines caught her eye, she picked up the paper and entered the bedroom where Duncan lay. It was becoming rumored about the village that Dunk the Dauntless might never operate on the vitals of an ailing tin Lizzie again.

"Dunnie," cried his wife, "Hap Ruggam's escaped!" Sinking down beside the bedroom lamp, she read him the article aloud.

Her husband's name was mentioned therein; for when the Sheriff had commandeered an automobile from the local garage to convey him and his posse to secure Ruggam, Duncan had presided at the steering wheel. He had thus assisted in the capture and later had been a witness at the trial.

The reading ended, the man rolled his head.

"If I wasn't held here, I might go!" he said. "I might try for that $5000 myself!"

"We caught him over on the Purcell farm," mused Duncan. "Something ailed Ruggam. He kept shrieking something about a head of hair—black hair—sticks up like wire. He must have had an awful impression of Mart's face and that hair of his."

"I remember about Aunt Mary Crumpett's telling me of the trouble her husband had with his prisoner before the trial," his wife replied. "He had those crazy spells often, nights. He kept yelling that he saw Martin Wiley's head with its peculiar hair, and his face peering in at him through the cell window."

"Five thousand dollars!" muttered Duncan. "Gawd. I'd hunt the devil for nothing if I only had a chance of getting out of this bed."

Cora smoothed her husband's rumpled bed and comforted him. When he had dozed off, she arose and left the room.

In the kitchen she resumed her former place beside the table, and there, with her face in her hands, she stared into endless distance.

Five thousand dollars! Like many others in the valley that night she pictured what it would mean to possess such a sum of money; but not once in her pitiful flight of fancy did she disregard the task which must be performed to gain that wealth.

It meant traveling upward in the great snowbound reaches of Vermont mountain country and tracking down a murderer who had killed a second time to gain his freedom and would stop at nothing again.

And yet—five thousand dollars!

At first it was only a faint challenge to her courage. She had no fear of the great outdoors, for she had lived close to the mountains from childhood and much of her old physical resiliency and youthful daredeviltry remained. And the need was terrible; not even her own people knew how terrible.

Cora McBride took the kitchen lamp and went upstairs. Lifting the top of a leather trunk, she found her husband's revolver. With it was a belt and holster, the former filled with cartridges. In the storeroom over the back kitchen she unhooked Duncan's mackinaw and found her own toboggan cap. From a corner behind some fishing rods she salvaged a pair of summer-dried snowshoes. She searched until she found the old army haversack Duncan used as a game bag. Its shoulder straps were broken but a length of rope sufficed to bind it about her shoulders, after she had filled it with provisions.

With this equipment she returned belowstairs. She drew on heavy woolen stockings and buckled on arctics. She entered the cold pantry and packed the knapsack with what supplies she could find at the hour. She did not forget a drinking cup, a hunting knife or matches. In her blouse she slipped a household flash lamp.

From the kitchen she called softly to her husband. He did not answer. He was asleep. She must not waken him.

She blew out the kerosene lamp, and went out through the shed door, closing it softly behind her.

An hour later found her far to the eastward, following an old side road that led up to the Harrison lumber job. She had meantime paid Dave Sheldon, a neighbor's boy, encountered by his gate, to stay with Duncan during her absence which she explained with a white lie.

She knew the woods. Intuitively she felt that if Ruggam was on Haystack Mountain making his way toward Lost Nation, he would strike for the shacks of the Green Mountain Club or the deserted logging camps along the trail, for he had no food, and provisions were often left in these structures by hunters and mountain hikers. She would investigate each group of buildings. She had the advantage of starting on the northwest side of Haystack. She would be working toward Ruggam, while the rest of the posses were trailing him.

She decided it must be midnight when she reached the ghostly buildings of the Harrison tract. It was useless to search these cabins. If Ruggam had left the freight at Norwall on the eastern side of Haystack at noon, he had thirty miles to travel before reaching the abandoned quiet of the clearing.

The hours of the night piled up. The silent, muffling snowfall continued. And Cora McBride began to sense an alarming weariness. It finally dawned upon her that her old-time vigor was missing. The strength of youth was hers no longer.

The realization of her limitations was accompanied by wild panic. She was still many miles even from Blind Brook Cabin, and her limbs were afire from the unaccustomed effort. "Tomboy Allen" had not counted on succumbing to physical fatigue before she had climbed as far as Blind Brook.

Tuesday the 28th of October passed with no tidings of Ruggam's capture.

The snowfall stopped in the early morning. Sunrise disclosed the world trimmed from horizon to horizon in fairy fluff. The sun soared higher, and the day grew warmer. Eaves began dripping during underneath, a good soil above, in the main, a healthy climate, and few to till the soil. And this valley is worth while. Just twenty miles east of my quarter section an oil company of Los Angeles, is putting down a well, struck a heavy vein of artesian water, at 420 feet. Before they reached 2000 feet they had struck other water strata, the last two of warm water. We have a number of hot water springs near here. At the Mimbres Hot Springs, sixty miles northeast of Deming, there are nine springs of almost boiling water, shooting up through the rocks.

"As I said in my previous letter, the early homesteaders were not farmers, but were attracted here by the glowing accounts of the valley, given out by real estate boomers. They thought a quarter of a section of land here would bring them a fortune. But their fortunes are still in the ground, undisturbed, for they had neither money nor experience in farming, to develop the land. A few had money, but no experience. After a couple of years they had experience but no money, and had to go back home to make a living.

"A few, here and there, had the courage and grit to hold on, and have made good to a certain extent. It takes time and experience and work to develop a new country. They would have succeeded far better had more land been tilled, so that they could have established good markets for all their products.

"What this valley needs is a number of men under middle age, experienced in farming and irrigating, and with money enough to start. Truck farmers do well here, also chickens and turkeys.

"One of the prettiest fields I ever saw was about six acres of sunflowers on a neighbor's farm. They were just mowing the sunflowers for the silo. The cattle eat this silage with relish. The stalks were so tall that I could not reach the heads in bloom. The dark green leaves, topped by immense yellow blossoms, was a sight for an artist.

"A tomato canning factory at Hondale is running now, and utrning out thousands of cans of tomatoes daily.

"I wish I could send you folks a big watermelon. They are fine. I asked a neighbor the other day to send me a small melon, about sixteen pounds. 'Can't do it; haven't any that weighs less than twenty-five pounds,' he said."

Do You Want This?

A HUNDRED MILLION persons may perish in the next war if democratic nations do not cease their race for armaments. There will be no noncombatants. Men, women and children will be killed by poison gas. The last great struggle nearly bankrupted society, the next will finish the job. Yellow races may then rule the world.

This catastrophe will surely arise if every citizen does not realize the menace, and consciously work for its prevention, by supporting the coming disarmament conference in Washington.

Cantilever Shoe
For Men, Women and Children

The Most Modern Shoe

Scientists today deplore the wearing of shoes which bind the foot and prohibit the free action of the muscles. Primitive peoples, who wore simple foot covering of soft skins, had feet that were graceful and sturdy. Their walk was elastic and untiring.

The ordinary stiff-soled shoes of "civilized" races cause many serious foot troubles because they check the circulation and weaken the muscles by disuse. But the Cantilever Shoe gives the foot perfect freedom. It supports a weak arch without harmful restraint. The flexible shank encourages the foot to arch and bend, to EXERCISE. It strengthens the muscles surrounding the twelve bones of the arch. In this splendid natural way, Cantilevers prevent and correct flat foot.

The Cantilever Shoe has a natural inner sole line that permits the toes to point straight ahead as they should for comfort. The heel is set to distribute the weight properly, without strain on the arch. Every detail is designed for ease and health. And without sacrifice of good looks!

THE FACE IN THE WINDOW

By William Dudley Pelley.

A Young Wife—An Invalid Husband—The Need of Money—An Escaped Convict—The Offered Reward—Then Thrills and Thrills of Masterly Style.

AT 9 O'CLOCK this morning Sheriff Crumpett entered our New England town postoffice for his mail. From his box he extracted a letter in a long yellow envelope that bore the return stamp of a prominent Boston lumber company. The old man hooked black-rimmed glasses on a big nose and tore a generous inch from the end of the envelope.

The first inclosure which met his eyes was a check. Impressed into the fabric of the safety-paper were the indelible figures of a protector. Not over five thousand ($5000) dollars.

The Sheriff read the name of the person to whom it was payable and gulped. His enough. But the Lost Nation folks use it as an excuse for a debauch. They gather in some sizable shack, set the stove out into the yard, soak themselves in aromatic spirits of deviltry and dance from Saturday night until Monday noon—"

"And this Ruggam killed a sheriff at one of them?"

"He got into a brawl with another chap. Some one passing saw the fight and sent bought the Johnson place, and Cora quickly demonstrated the same furious enthusiasm for homemaking and motherhood that she had for athletics and carburetors.

Three years passed, and two small boys crept about the yard behind the white rail fence. Then—when Duncan and his wife were "making a great go of matrimony" in typical Yankee fashion—came the tragedy. In the infantile-paralysis epi-

Cora smoothed her husband's rumpled bed and comforted him. When he had dozed off, she arose and left the room.

In the kitchen she resumed her former place beside the table, and there, with her face in her hands, she stared into endless distance.

Five thousand dollars! Like many others in the valley that night she pictured what it would mean to possess such a sum of money; but not once in her pitiful flight of fancy did she disregard the task which must be performed to gain that wealth.

It meant traveling upward in the great snowbound reaches of Vermont mountain the dawn hour, to stop when the sun sank about 4 o'clock behind Bancroft's hill.

After the sunset came a perfect evening. The starlight was magic.

Some time between 9 o'clock and midnight—she had no way of telling exactly—Cora McBride reached the Lyons clearing.

For over an hour she had hobbled blindly. It was wholly by accident that she had stumbled into the clearing. And the capture of Ruggam had diminished in importance. Warm food, water that would not tear her raw throat, a place to lie and recoup her strength after the chilling winter night—these were the only things that counted now. When a snag caught her snowshoe and tripped her, there was hysteria in her cry of resentment.

As she moved across from the timber line her hair was revealed fallen down; she had lost a glove, and one hand and wrist were cruelly red where she had plunged them several times into the snow to save herself from falling upon her face. She made but a few yards before the icy thong of her right snowshoe snapped. Carrying the snowshoe beneath her arm, she hobbled brokenly toward the shelter of the buildings.

So she gained the walls of the buildings, thoughtless of any possible signs of the fugitive.

The stars were out in myriads. The log buildings of the clearing stood out sharply against the peculiar radiance of the snow. The night was as still as the spaces between the planets.

The woman clumped and stumbled around the main shack, seeking the door.

Finding it, she stopped; the snowshoe slipped from beneath her arm; one numb hand groped for the log door casing in support; the other fumbled for the revolver.

Tracks led into that cabin!

A paralysis of fright gripped Cora McBride. She stood face to face at last with what she had traveled all this mountain wilderness to find. Yet with sinking heart it also came to her that if Hap Ruggam had made these tracks and were still within, she must face him in her exhausted condition and at once make that tortuous return trip to civilization. There would be no one to help her.

She realized in that moment that she was facing the primal. And she was not primal. She was a normal woman, weakened to near prostration by the trek of the past twenty-four hours. Was it not better to turn away while there was time?

She stood debating thus, the eternal silence blanketing forest world and clearing. But she was allowed to make no decision.

A living body sprang suddenly upon her. Before she could cry out, she was borne down precipitously from behind.

She tried to turn the revolver against the Thing upon her, but the gun was twisted from her raw, red fingers. The snow into which she had been precipitated blinded her. She smeared an arm across her eyes, but before clear sight was regained, talon fingers had gripped her shoulders. She was half lifted, half dragged through the doorway, and there she was dropped on the plank flooring. Her assailant, turning, made to close and bar the door.

When she could see clearly, she perceived a weak illumination in the cabin. On the rough bench table, shaded by two slabs of bark, burned the stub of a tallow candle probably left by some hunting party.

The windows were curtained with rotting blankets. Some rough furniture lay about; rusted cooking utensils littered the tables, and at one end was a sheet-iron stove. The place had been equipped after a fashion by deer hunters or mountain hikers, who brought additional furnishings to the place each year and left mouldy provisions and unconsumed firewood behind.

The man succeeded finally in closing the door. He turned upon her.

He was short and stocky. The stolen corduroy coat covered blacksmith's muscles now made doubly powerful by dementia. His hair was lifeless black and clipped close, prison-fashion. His low forehead hung over burning, mismated eyes. From her helplessness on the floor Cora McBride stared up at him.

He came closer.

"Get up!" he ordered. "Take that chair. And don't start no rough house; whether you're a woman or not, I'll drill you!"

She groped to the indicated chair and raised herself, the single snowshoe still dragging from one foot. Again the man surveyed her. She saw his eyes and gave another inarticulate cry.

"Shut your mouth, and keep it shut! You hear me?"

She obeyed.

The greenish light burned brighter in his mismated eyes, which gazed intently at the top of her head as though it held something unearthly.

"Take off your hat!" was his next command.

She pulled off the toque. Her hair fell in a mass on her snow-blotched shoulders. Her captor advanced upon her. He reached out and satisfied himself by touch that something was not there which he dreaded. In hypnotic fear she suffered that touch. It reassured him.

"Your hair now," he demanded; "it don't stand up, does it? No, o' course it don't. You ain't him; you're a woman. But if your hair comes up, I'll kill you—understand? If your hair comes up, I'll kill you!"

She understood only too well. She was housed with a maniac. And she was alone with him, unarmed now.

"I'll keep it down," she whispered, watching his face out of fear-distended eyes.

The wind blew one of the rotten blankets inward. Thereby she knew that the window-aperture on the south wall contained no sash. He must have removed it to provide means of escape in case he were attacked from the east door. He must have climbed out that window when she came around the shack; that is how he had felled her from behind.

He stepped backward now until he felt the edge of the bench touch his calves. Then he sank down, one arm stretched along the table's rim, the hand clutching the revolver.

"Who are you?" he demanded.

"I'm Cora McB—" She stopped—she recalled in a flash the part her husband had played in his former capture and trial. "I'm Cora Allen," she corrected. Then she waited, her wits in chaos.

"What you doin' up here?"

"I started for Millington, over the mountain. I lost my way."

"Why didn't you go by the road?"

"It's further."

"That's a lie! It ain't. And don't lie to me, or I'll kill you!"

"Who are you?" she heard herself asking. "And why are you acting this way with me?"

The man leaned suddenly forward.

"You mean to tell me you don't know?"

"A lumberjack, maybe, who's lost his way like myself?"

His expression changed abruptly.

"What you luggin' this for?" He indicated the revolver.

"For protection."

"From what?"

"Wild things."

"There ain't no wild things in these mountains this time o' year; they're snowed up, and you know it."

"I just felt safer to have it along."

"To protect you from men folks, maybe?"

"There are no men in these mountains I'm afraid of!" She made the declaration with pathetic bravado.

His eyes narrowed.

"I think I better kill you," he decided. "You've seen me; you'll tell you seen me. Why shouldn't I kill you? You'd only tell."

He sprang up with a snarl. Pointing the revolver from his hip, he drew back the hammer.

"Don't!" she shrieked. "Are you crazy? Don't you know how to treat a woman—in distress?"

"Distress, hell! You know who I be. And I don't care whether you're a woman or not, I ain't goin' to be took—you understand?"

"Certainly I understand."

She said it in such a way that he eased the hammer back into place and lowered the gun. For the moment again she was safe. In response to her terrible need, some of her latent Yankee courage came now to aid her. "I don't see what you're making all this rumpus about," she told him in as indifferent a voice as she could command. "I don't see why you should want to kill a friend who might help you—if you're really in need of help."

"I want to get to Partridgeville," he muttered after a moment.

"You're not far from there. How long have you been on the road?"

"None of your business."

"Have you had any food?"

"No."

"If you'll put up that gun and let me get off this snowshoe and pack, I'll share with you some of the food I have."

"Never you mind what I do with this gun. Go ahead and fix your foot, and let's see what you got for grub." The man resumed his seat.

She twisted up her tangled hair, replaced her toque and untied the dangling snowshoe.

Outside a tree cracked in the frost. He started in hair-trigger fright. Creeping to the window, he peeped cautiously between casing and blanket. Convinced that it was nothing, he returned to his seat by the table.

"It's too bad we couldn't have a fire," suggested the woman then. "I'd make us something hot." The stove was there, rusted but still serviceable; available wood was scattered around. But the man shook his bullet head.

After a trying time unfastening the frosted knots of the ropes that had bound the knapsack upon her back, she emptied it on to the table. She kept her eye, however, on the gun. He had disposed of it by thrusting it into his belt. Plainly she would never recover it without a struggle. And she was in no condition for physical conflict.

"You're welcome to anything I have," she told him.

"Little you got to say about it! If you hadn't given it up, I'd took it away from you. So what's the difference?"

"You stay here in front where I can see you."

She obeyed, watching him make what poor meal he could from the contents of her bag.

The silence was broken only by the noises of his lips as he ate ravenously. Outside, not a thing stirred in that snowbound world. Not a sound of civilization reached them. They were a man and woman in the primal, in civilization and yet a million miles from it.

"The candle's going out," she announced. "Is there another?"

"There'll be light enough for what I got to do," he growled.

Despite her effort to appear indifferent, "Are we going to stay here all night?" "Ahe we going to stay here all night?" she asked with a pathetic attempt at lightness.

"That's my business."

"Don't you want me to help you?"

"You've helped me all you can with the gun and food."

"If you're going to Partridgeville, I'd go along and show you the way."

He leaped up.

"Now I know you been lyin'!" he bellowed. "You said you was headed for Millington. And you ain't at all. You're watchin' your chance to get the drop on me and have me took—that's what you're doin'!"

"Wait!" she pleaded desperately. "I was going to Millington. But I'd turn back and show you the way to Partridgeville to help you."

"What's it to you?" He had drawn the gun from his belt and now was fingering it nervously.

"You're lost up here in the mountains, aren't you?" she said. "I couldn't let you stay lost if it was possible for me to direct you on your way."

"You said you was lost yourself."

"I was lost—until I stumbled into this clearing. That gave me my location."

"Smart, ain't you? Damn smart, but not too smart for me, you woman!" The flare flamed up again in his crooked eyes. "You know who I be, all right. You know what I'm aimin' to do. And you're stallin' for time till you can put one over. But you can't—see? I'll have this business done with. I'll end this business!"

She felt herself sinking to her knees. He advanced and gripped her left wrist. The crunch of his iron fingers sent an arrow of pain through her arm. It bore her down.

"For God's sake—don't!" she whispered hoarsely, overwhelmed with horror. For the cold, sharp nose of the revolver suddenly punched her neck.

"I ain't leavin' no traces behind. Might as well be hung for a sheep as a lamb. Never mind if I do—"

"Look!" she cried wildly. "Look, look, look!" And with her free hand she pointed behind him.

It was an old trick. There was nothing behind him. But in that instant of desperation instinct had guided her.

Involuntarily he turned.

With a scream of pain she twisted from his grasp and blotted out the candle.

A long, livid pencil of orange flame spurted from the gun-point. She sensed the powder-flare in her face. He had missed.

She scrambled for shelter beneath the table. The cabin was now in inky blackness. Across that black four more threads of scarlet light were laced. The man stumbled about seeking her, cursing with blood-curdling blasphemy.

Suddenly he tripped and went sprawling. The gun clattered from his bruised fingers; it struck the woman's knee. Swiftly her hand closed upon it. The hot barrel burned her palm.

She was on her feet in an instant. Her left hand fumbled in her blouse, and she found the flash-lamp.

With her back against the door, she pulled it forth. With the gun thrust forward for action she pressed the button.

"I've got the gun—get up!" she ordered. "Don't come near me or I'll shoot. Back up against that wall."

The bull's-eye of radiance blinded him. When his eyes became accustomed to the light, he saw its reflection on the barrel of the revolver. He obeyed.

"Put up your hands. Put 'em up high!"

"Suppose I won't?"

"I'll kill you."

"What'll you gain by that?"

"Five thousand dollars."

"Then you know who I be?"

"Yes."

"And was aimin' to take me in?"

"Yes."

"How you goin' to do that if I won't go?"

"You're goin' to find out."

"You won't get no money shootin' me."

"Yes, I will—just as much—dead or alive."

With his hands raised a little way above the level of his shoulders, he stood rigidly at bay in the circle of light.

"Well," he croaked at last, "go ahead and shoot. I ain't aimin' to be took—not by no woman. Shoot, damn you, and have it done with. I'm waitin'!"

"Keep up those hands!"

"I won't!" He lowered them defiantly. "I w-wanted to m-make Partridgeville and see the old lady. She'd 'a' helped me. But anything's better'n goin' back to that hell where I been the last two years. Go on! Why don't you shoot?"

"You wanted to make Partridgeville and see—who?"

"My mother—and my wife."

"Have you got a mother? Have you got a—wife?"

"Yes, and three kids. Why don't you shoot?"

It seemed an eon that they stood so. The McBride woman was trying to find the nerve to fire. She could not. In that instant she made a discovery that many luckless souls make too late; to kill a man is easy to talk about, easy to write about. But to stand deliberately face to face with a fellow-human—alive, pulsing, breathing, fearing, hoping, loving, living—point a weapon at him that would take his life, blot him from the earth, negate twenty or thirty years of childhood, youth, maturity, and make of him in an instant—nothing!—that is quite another matter.

He was helpless before her now. Perhaps the expression on his face had something to do with the sudden revulsion that halted her finger. Facing certain death, some of the evil in those crooked eyes seemed to die out, and the terrible personality of the man to fade. Regardless of her danger, regardless of what he would have done to her if luck had not turned the tables, Cora McBride saw before her only a lone man with all society's hand against him, realizing he had played a bad game to the limit and lost, two big tears creeping down his unshaved face, waiting for the end.

"Three children!" she whispered faintly.

"Yes."

"You're going back to see them?"

"Yes, and my mother. Mother'd help me get to Canada—somehow."

Cora McBride had forgotten all about the five thousand dollars. She was stunned by the announcement that this man had relatives—a mother, a wife, three babies. The human factor had not before occurred to her. Murderers! They have no license to let their eyes well with tears, to have wives and babies, to possess mothers who will help them get to Canada regardless of what their earthly indiscretions may have been.

At this revelation the gun point wavered. The sight of those tears on his face sapped her will power even as a wound in her breast might have drained her lifeblood.

Her great moment had been given her. She was letting it slip away. She had her reward in her hand for the mere pulling of a trigger and no incrimination for the result. For a bit of human sentiment she was bungling the situation unpardonably, fatally.

The gun sank, sank—down out of the light, down out of sight.

And the next instant he was upon her. The flash-lamp was knocked from her hand and blinked out. It struck the stove he gave me during the examination than I did before I entered the office.

"I went home and a friend suggested that I take a good course of physical culture, which I did, with wonderful results. A year later I had a big, fine nine-pound baby boy, and never have been ill since."

A highway robber is a gentleman, compared with those who do such things. Why doesn't the medical profession clean them out?

Raising the Dust.

THE life of the household broom has been prolonged 100 per cent in recent years, according to the Chicago broom manufacturers. Moving pictures and automobiles were blamed for neglect of the broom, and the manufacturers decided to start a campaign to make sweeping popular again.

A bad habit. Brooms raise dust, much of which floats in the air and settles again.

The electric sweeper is much better. Only, I wish they wouldn't make such a horrid noise.

"Healthy Disease Carriers."

ONE of the most monstrous developments of the germ theory of disease is that of "healthy disease carriers." An unfortunate woman has been kept in confinement for years, in New York, without any warrant of law.

An eminent "health authority" writes:

"It sems cruel to limit the freedom of a human being, but the good of society must be conserved, even though the individual is made to suffer. One notable carrier has a record of sixty cases of typhoid and twenty deaths. For the common good such a person must be kept under constant observation.

"It is interesting to find, too, that some persons have been discovered to be typhoid fever carriers who give no history of having had the disease. These are called 'healthy carriers.' The other variety is called 'convalescent carriers.'

"Recently, where one of the quarantine stations was testing for cholera carriers, a number of typhoid carriers were discovered. It is probable that if the test were universally applied an enormous number of carriers would be found who will probably go through life unsuspected. They are scattering deadly germs without knowing it."

Unable to explain the fact that at any time you may find these so-called "disease germs" in the throats of healthy people, medical science has hit upon this latest and most absurd theory.

These germs are not the cause of disease, but are beneficent scavengers.

Under such a ruling, anyone might be detained and imprisoned. It would be worse than the Spanish Inquisition.

How long will the people endure such criminal folly, carried on under the name of "medical science?"

Typhoid fever comes from within, not from without—from filthy colons, charged with the waste matter of unwholesome and surplus food.

How to Keep Young.

IN A RECENT number of Physical Culture, a veteran physician, who is nearing the century mark, told how he keeps young. Regarding big muscles he writes:

"Our strong men often act as if they didn't know how to carry their own muscles, or were ashamed of them, or, what is worse, were vain of them. The bodies of many of them, too, are more developed in one part than another—not symmetrical—and they are often overdeveloped all over, which is simply to be deformed. A perfect body is evenly developed in every part, and is as strong to leap and run as to lift, pull or push—as quick as a cat and as firm as a bull.'

Also, I may add, it has endurance, which is more important than strength.

Caruso's lungs were so powerful that when a concert grand piano was pressed against his chest he moved it several inches by the expansion of his lungs.

Yet that did not prevent him from dying in the prime of life.

Strength and health are not necessarily synonymous.

Birds and Bugs.

THAT the mysterious forest fires which broke out in all parts of the forest reserve and in the farming districts of Santa Ynez Valley, California, were caused in large part by phosphorous from the crop [illegible] bankers and others who have been through the fire regions.

It is futile to attempt to interfere with the orderly operations of nature.

Kill off the birds and insects multiply. And so on, ad infinitum.

What Money Cannot Buy.

THE death of Sir Ernest Cassell, the famous English financier, recalls an interview he gave some years ago, shortly after the death of his daughter. He said:

"There is nothing in the greatest financial success to equal the love of a devoted wife and the delight of a family of happy children."

SEVERAL months ago I printed a letter from Dr. Mary Kraft, formerly of Los Angeles, who is at present ranching in the Mimbres Valley, New Mexico. Following is from a letter from her dated Hondale, N. M., October 2:

"Your publication of my communication brought me many letters from which I learned two things—that The Times is a first-class advertising medium and that there are many city people who would like to go on the land if they could afford it.

"It set me to thinking seriously. For, on the one hand are people who want a home in the country. And on the other hand here are thousands of acres lying idle, with water

AT GRIPS WITH DEATH IN TRAPPING JUNGLE BEASTS

BY CHARLES MAYER.

(ILLUSTRATIONS BY WILL CRAWFORD.)

IT took more than a week after the departure of the Sultan of Trengganu for the natives to get their fill of celebration. While they feasted and danced, I made my plans for the stocks in which the sixty elephants were to be broken.

The breaking of elephants, especially so large a herd, is a long, tedious job. I was thankful that I had Prince Omar with me to keep the natives working. The hunter who kills and skins his animals has a simple life compared with the collector, who must not only take the animals alive and uninjured, but convey them through miles of jungle country to a port. Months of hard labor were before us, and the success of the expedition was by no means assured, even though we had our elephants safe in the stockade. It was to be a great test in managing the natives.

There is only one thing that a Malay values, and that is his kris—his knife. To lose this cherished possession, means to lose honor. There is a saying to the effect that money will buy everything but a lucky kris. Their disregard of money makes all dealings with Malays extremely difficult, and their dislike for work has completely blocked more than one project. To my mind, the Malays are the laziest people in the world.

When work is an exciting or amusing game, such as the hunt, they will go on for days without signs of fatigue. They seem to keep alive by some fanatic energy. But when work is just plain labor, they will say "Wait" or "I must think." Or a Malay may say candidly: "Sir, I have just had plenty to eat. I am content." Many times I have had a Malay tell me, when I asked him to do some work, that he had enough rice and fish for the day and that he might die during the night. It is an unanswerable argument. Tomorrow's food can be found when tomorrow comes.

The Malay's food is simple and his clothes are few. With no more effort than dropping a few seeds and covering them with earth, he can grow most of the food he needs aside from his rice and fish. One catch of fish will supply his family for weeks and give him a surplus to sell to the Chinese traders. With the money he can buy some cloth and a little powder. Six or seven good-sized chickens cost 1 Mexicon dollar; eggs cost 1 Mexican cent; yams, 1 or 2 cents each; pineapples, 2 or 3 cents. Why worry about the tomorrow that may never come? Why should a Malay gentleman, who believes in Allah and whose stomach is full, do the labor that can be done by heathen, pig-eating Chinese?

"Will you row me across the river?" I asked a Malay one day.

"Tuan, I have eaten and I have had plenty," he replied. "You may take my boat and row yourself across the river. Tomorrow, if Allah grants me life and if I need the boat, I will swim over for it."

That Malay trait of living for the moment has led many a European to murder, and more than once it made me feel like running amok. It is maddening. Getting work out of Malays is a fine art, a science to be learned only after years of patient arguing and cajoling. And yet, with all their laziness, they are lovable people. In most cases they are brave and willing to do anything for a person they like.

Under the circumstances, sick with fever and worn out by the drive through the jungle, I was entitled to some doubt as to what the next few months would bring. The Sultan had left strict orders that I was to be provided with all the labor I needed, and Omar was there to assist me. However, I waited with anxiety to see what the attitude of the natives would be after they had finished celebrating, and I was encouraged to find that I had earned the name Tuan Gajah—Sir Elephant. They were deeply impressed by the power of the white man who had engineered a great drive of sixty elephants and who owned the exceedingly marvelous gun that his man, Ali, displayed with such proud ostentation.

Inasmuch as they were receiving no money for their work, they had some right to object, but I humored them with promises of celebrations and games. The white man's camp became a popular place in Trengganu. Wonderful tales of what was done there spread through the country, and the men who had been to the camp could command an audience in their home compounds when they returned. The elephant drive was a historic event in the country, and henceforth we had little trouble with labor.

The work of breaking wild elephants must be carried on with painstaking exactness, for one elephant can create havoc in a few seconds if the men lose control. The first task is the building of the stocks where the elephants are to be held while they become accustomed to men; then comes the work of driving into the ground, about four feet apart, two rows of heavy stakes, leading from the trap to the stocks. Also, next the trap, a small inclosure, four or five feet wide by fifteen long, is built at the end of the passageway formed by the stakes. The piles of the trap are removed from the entrance to this inclosure and bars are substituted. Since the elephants were given practically no food during the time they were kept in the trap, they were half starved when the breaking commenced. In their weakened condition they were much less dangerous to handle, and, too, they could then be fed in such a way as to impress upon them the fact that good behavior brings good treatment.

The young elephants required no breaking, and so they were lured from the trap with food. They roamed about the camp, playing and watching operations.

As soon as the tuskers were taken from the trap, they were killed for their ivory. The tusks were worth almost as much as I could get for the live animals, and tusks are far easier to handle than animals that have to be broken and fed. Also, as the animal dealers say, the elephant might "eat and die." I did the killing with my express rifle. The explosive bullets produced instant death. Another way of killing an elephant is to strangle him by running two ropes around his neck and having elephants pull him in opposite directions.

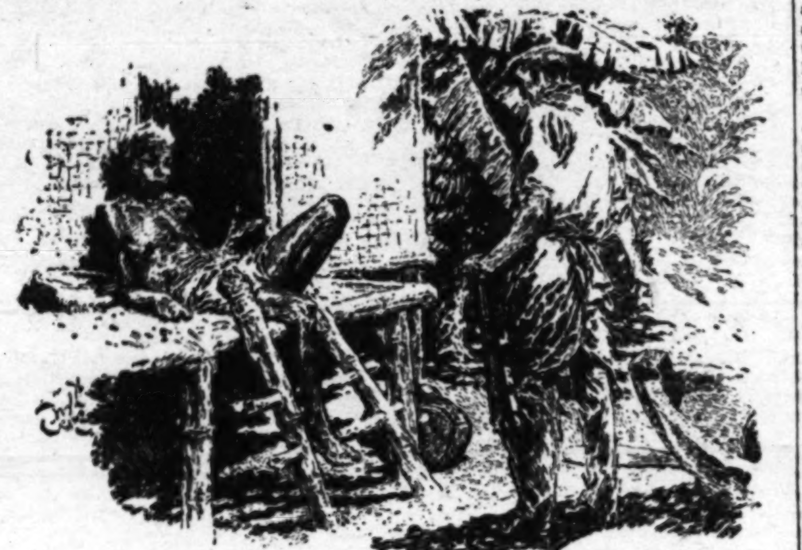
As soon as all the equipment for breaking was ready, I instructed the natives in their work. With a select crew of men, I rehearsed all the details of what we were going to do and how we were going to do it. Finally, I ordered food placed in the inclosure and the bars drawn. The nearest elephant saw the food, flapped his ears and walked in. Breaking commenced.

As soon as the elephant enters the smaller inclosure, the bars behind him are slipped. He eats the food so eagerly that he does not realize quite what is happening and the men put the knee and foot-hobbles on him. These allow him about one-quarter of his normal step. Rattan ropes are fastened to his feet and drawn out through the bars; his trunk is secured so that he can do no damage with it.

There is a great deal of misunderstanding about what an elephant can do with his trunk. It is a sensitive organ and he never uses it for heavy labor, but he can strike a terrific blow with it. I have seen many a man's ribs and arms broken when he neglected to take the proper precautions. In approaching a dangerous elephant, a man should come up sideways, with the nearer arm folded to protect his ribs. Then, if the elephant strikes, he should try to catch the blow on the upper part of the arm, where there is the most flesh to protect the bone. Such a blow never knocks a man flat; it sends him spinning like a top until he tumbles over.

The elephant uses both his trunk and his lungs in calling, and he has a large variety of sounds and combinations of sound with which to express himself. When rushing an enemy, he trumpets shrilly; when enraged by wounds, he grumbles hoarsely from his throat; he expresses fear by a shrill, brassy trumpet and a roar; and pleasure by a continued low squeaking through the trunk. When apprehensive of danger or when attempting to intimidate an enemy, he raps the end of his trunk smartly on the ground and trumpets. The peculiar noise sounds like that produced by the rolling up of a sheet of tin.

In a moment of danger, the elephant coils his trunk to protect it from injury. When he is engaged in heavy work, such as piling lumber, he may use his trunk to balance the load he is carrying on his tusks, but never to bear part of the burden. If an unharnessed elephant must pull a rope, he holds it in his mouth, taking good care to keep his trunk out of the way. It has happened many times that an elephant-keeper—not a trainer, for a trainer knows better—has used a hook a little too freely on an elephant's trunk. If he doesn't get killed he picks himself up several yards from where he was standing. A trainer is invariably pleased at such an occurrence, because it shows that the keeper was abusing the elephant and has merely received his deserts. The elephant is a good, faithful animal, and he does not attack his keeper without excuse, except when he is in what is called the "must" period, which I shall describe later.



"Juan, you may take my boat and row yourself across the river."

When the elephant is secured by hobbles, foot-ropes and trunk-ropes, the bars leading from the inclosure are removed. The foot-ropes have been fastened to the stakes and are loosened as the elephant walks out. The men holding the ropes attached to the fore feet wind them around the two stakes ahead, and those holding the ropes attached to the hind feet wind them about the first stakes. In this way the animal is drawn forward, step by step, toward the stocks, while natives prod him from behind with poles. If he tries to bolt, he simply falls over. It is a difficult, trying job, because the elephant is still vicious.

The stocks are built in covered stalls, so that each elephant is separate from the others. Two large uprights are driven into the ground in the shape of a V; the elephant's head is drawn between them, and they are pulled together at the top so that he is held securely behind the ears. At the corners are uprights, with poles, to fence him in, running between them. These poles, located a trifle below his belly, support two cross-bars, one just behind his fore legs, and the other in front of his back legs. In this position it is impossible for the elephant to lie down or to move; he can wiggle his legs and wave his trunk, but that is all.

The elephant remains in the stocks for about two weeks. During that time he is fed and petted by a keeper appointed for that particular job. The keeper crawls over his back and rubs him behind the ears and gives him water, fruit and bamboo shoots. The elephant learns not to be afraid when a man is near him, and he gradually becomes more docile. During these two weeks he is fed very lightly because he must be kept in a weakened condition.

After two or three weeks, according to the disposition of the elephant, ropes are again attached to his feet, and he is led out of the stocks. This time he wears only the knee-hobbles, which allow him more play. Eight or ten men hold each of the ropes; his keeper sits on his head with a prod; another crew hold the rope attached to his trunk; and six or eight men follow with rattan whips. The men with the whips beat him continually. At first in the excitement, he does not mind the whipping; then he finds the pain unbearable. The men on the trunk-ropes lead him about from right to left, while the men on the foot-ropes stand ready to trip him if he tries to bolt. At last he gives a bellow of pain and the whipping stops.

This one bellow marks a surprising change in the animal. His spirit is broken and he acknowledges that man is his master. The fact that he is instantly fed and petted helps him to make up his mind, of course, and to forget about the old, wild ways of the jungle. Thereafter, a keeper who does not deliberately make him angry can handle him easily. His schooling is brief and he learns readily to turn, kneel, back and pull. In return he is given plenty of food and is tied to a tree instead of being put in the stocks.

It occasionally happened that an elephant refused to bellow. In that case, I had the men lead him out to be shot, for I knew I should be wasting time in trying to break him.

Eight months passed in this work. I was sick with fever and dysentery and I was glad when we could break camp. Riding on the head of an elephant, I led my catch through the jungle to port. Once again I paid my respects to the Sultan, who told me that I might hunt in Trengganu whenever I pleased. A year before, I should have been wildly delighted at the prospect of having Trengganu open to me under his protection, but now, with my health broken, I did not care much if I never saw the country again.

I arranged for the keeping of the animals until they could be brought by boat to Singapore, and then I caught the first coast steamer south, taking four elephants with me. At Singapore I found that the story of the big capture had been the talk of the city for months. In fact, several days after I arrived, I went to call on my former enemy, Mahommed Ariff, and he took off his turban and bowed. We had many dealings after that, and he always treated me with the greatest respect and honesty.

When I was leading one of the smaller elephants through the street on my way to the animal house I had rented in Orchard Road, I was approached by an Arab.

"Tuan, mau jual? (Sir, do you wish to sell?") he asked.

"Of course," I answered. I was sick and tired and I did not want to be bothered.

He persisted. "Tuan, how much?"

"All of them or just one?"

"That one," he answered, pointing to the elephant I was leading.

Salt.

FOLLOWING is by Louise Lust in the Herald of Health:

“Salt—chloride of sodium—is a constituent of the human body, and is always found in wheat and other grains and vegetables. Why not season food with vegetable salts? Table salt destroys natural flavor in vegetables, but if the salt eater abstains from it for a few weeks, undreamed of flavors will be discovered in food. Salt also induces unnatural thirst—salt is an irritating mineral, and if retained in the system, becomes a source of disease. If excessive salt eaters lessen the quantity used or abstain entirely, they are often afflicted with salt salivation, showing that somewhere in the system an excessive amount of salt exists, which nature gets rid of in that way. The body, while the patient undergoes a course of hygienic treatment, eliminates the surplus.

“Entire races of men are unacquainted with salt, and thousands of hygienists and vegetarians abstain from its use.

“In regard to the excretion of uric acid, salt does harm, for the addition of a mineral acid diminishes the alkalinity of the blood and tissue fluids, and it is of no use to eat potatoes and avoid acid foods while swallowing considerable quantities of salt.

“Thirst is the general rule for water drinking. Those who use a plain unstimulating diet have little thirst and require but little drink. It is injurious to load the stomach with a large quantity of water when nature does not demand it. As with food, all water that cannot be used is a burden which must be thrown off. The routine practice of drinking so many tumblers per day is reprehensible. It is well to take a glass of water in the morning, and at other times according to thirst.

“It is unnatural and injurious to drink water at meals. Nature has intended the saliva to be the solvent of the food. If the food is well masticated and insalivated it will never need any water or any other fluid to ‘wash it down.’

“In acute diseases there is often extreme thirst, and here water drinking may be indulged in by taking a little, and often. In many cases of low fevers warm water will ease thirst. Cool but not very cold water is the most natural drink, but it is very important to have the water pure.”

Vision.

A WASHINGTON correspondent writes of the coming disarmament conference:

“To hold fast to the practical and shun visionary aims, will be the constant endeavor of the American delegation, in whose membership practicality and absence of visionary tendencies are a common trait.”

It is well to be practical, but there must also be vision—vision of better conditions for humanity.

On the patio walls of the Mission Inn, at Riverside, Cal., is the quotation. “Where there is no vision, the people perish.”

Avocados.

MY DAUGHTER brought me from San Francisco an avocado for which she paid 35 cents. In Los Angeles such a fruit would cost 75 cents. It was probably imported from Hawaii or Mexico.

Perhaps, before long, this wholesome fruit may be obtainable at a reasonable price. At present they are beyond the reach of people of limited means.

A Good Deed.

MRS. FRANK O'CONNOR and her nine children have been established in a comfortable home by New Orleans people, who have shown themselves true neighbors. Only a few months ago, her husband, father and breadwinner of the family was killed by a fall. Mother and little ones struggled along bravely for weeks. But the struggle became too much for them, and they were on the verge of being evicted for nonpayment of rent, when a local paper made their plight known to the public and appealed for help in their behalf.

The response was immediate and adequate. What is more, it took a form that [illegible] would have [illegible]. The home into which the O'Connor family moved the other day was constructed by union workers, who labored without pay, out of materials donated by builders' supply men, on a lot purchased out of a purse made up by real estate dealers; and it was furnished without charge by furniture dealers who vied with each other in making their offerings.

Commercial Medicine.

FOLLOWING letter, from Mrs. Pearl Williams, illustrates the usual operations of commercial medicine, otherwise medical graft. Reputable physicians deplore such methods, but seem powerless to stop them:

“I was taken ill, while on a visit to San Francisco. I had been nervous and run down for some time, and needed a rest and right food more than anythingeelse, but my condition became alarming to my friends, so I was advised to consult a ‘specialist.’

“I called upon a doctor, supposed to have one of the largest practices in the city, with five elaborately furnished offices, maids, nurses, etc., in attendance. I was ushered into the consulting room where I met the doctor, who was most courteous. Before he had given me any tests, he stated that I had ovary trouble, and that if I would pass on to the examination-room, he would give me a thorough examination.

“One of the nurses came in to assist the doctor. After I was got ready for the examination the doctor started in to find out my trouble. From the rough way in which he handled me, if I hadn't had extra good strong organs, he would have caused trouble there. I jumped up from the chair and told him I was not going to submit to any more such rough treatment. I told him I knew I had no ovary trouble, as I had never had any symptoms, but he was positive I had, and insisted that an operation would be necessary. He had a long list of names that I could call on the phone, of people he had successfully operated on, and all in good health now. (Stool pigeons, no doubt.)

“I asked how much an operation would cost. He said $500. Then he asked me how soon I could get the money. He asked if my parents had any money and how much, as the operation might be more, ‘if he found more to be removed.’

“I spoke up to him, and told him what I thought of him and what a money grabber he was, and left without paying any fees, as I was suffering more from the treatment

THE TRIFLER

By William McLeod Raine

AUHOR OF "THE YUKON TRAIL," "THE BIG-TOWN ROUND-UP," ETC.

JAMES ADAMS looked up from the letter he was writing at the tent table. For a silent moment he watched his cousin arrange his necktie to his critical satisfaction by the light of a swinging lantern. Adams disliked extremely what he had to do, but he was not the man to shirk a duty because it was disagreeable.

"Where are you going, Alan?" he asked at last.

"Oh, just out."

"Meaning that it is none of my business. I wish I knew it wasn't," answered the older man gravely.

"Don't be a granny, Jim. You are not your cousin's keeper any longer, you know. I'm of age. That relieves you of responsibility, I expect," Alan flung over his shoulder impatiently, still too busy with his tie to turn around.

He was a good looking young fellow in a boyish way. There was in his light curly hair and insouciant manner some suggestion of perennial youth. His face showed not an ounce of wickedness, but both mouth and eyes lacked the stamp of force and decision.

A troubled frown clouded the clearcut face of the older cousin. "If by that you mean I am no longer legally responsible you are right. But I can't stand by and see you do wrong without hindering it if I can.'

Alan swung round, flushing angrily.

"What right have you to assume that I am doing wrong? Does that necessarily follow because I go to see a girl?"

"It does if you make engagements to meet her without her people's knowledge. It does if you make love to a girl you can't marry," answered the older man steadily.

"Why can't I marry her?" demanded Alan hotly. "Who says I shan't?"

"Do you mean to marry her?"

"Oh, cut it out, Jim. This isn't your affair."

James Adams believed it was his business, but he did not say so directly. He put a hand on the shoulder of his sullen young cousin and looked straight into his angry, unstable eyes.

"Look here, Alan. There comes a time to every real man when he can no longer play at life as he did when he was a boy. He has to take hold of it with both hands and face it squarely without any dodging or self-deception. I wonder if that time hasn't come to you."

Alan shifted uneasily. "Oh, tommyrot!" he cried petulantly.

"It isn't tommyrot, my boy. Only a weakling drifts into vital decisions. A man sits down, counts up the cost, and decides whether he can afford to pay it. That is what you must do about this girl. You must play fair both by her and by yourself. If you think of marrying her you must decide whether she has it in her to make you a fit wife. If you're not going to marry her you must stop going to see her."

"I don't know why I must," grumbled the boy doggedly.

"Because it's the right thing to do. You're a likeable young idiot, and out in this forsaken spot the girls at the ranches don't get a chance to see many young men. It's more than conceivable that she may have to pay too heavily for your idle gallantries. You don't want to leave a broken heart in your wake, do you?"

"It seems to me you are taking a good deal on yourself to butt in," said Alan sulkily.

"I don't think I am. Your mother asked me before she died to look out for you, Alan."

"In Adams's voice there was an appeal, but the youngster chose not to respond to it. "I guess I can look out for myself."

"Are you looking out for Miss Steelman too as an honest man should? Are you sure she does not care for you?"

Before his cousin's level eyes the younger man felt himself wither. "Hang it, you've been spying!" he said angrily.

The face of the older man set like a vice. "Careful, Alan, careful," he said quietly.

"Well, why do you worry me into saying such things?" blurted out the lad fretfully.

"I don't want to worry you. All I want is that you should be an honest man and know your own mind."

"Well, why shouldn't I marry her if I want to?" demanded Alan with aggressive inconsequence.

"I don't know. I have never met her. But you want to be very sure you are not under an infatuation. The Steelman's are honest people enough, I dare say, though I have never met them. But they don't belong to your class socially."

"I thought you were a democratic fellow, and all that sort of thing."

Adams smiled. "Perhaps I am, but I recognize gulfs of nature and of education that can't be bridged. I don't say this is a case in point, but it may be. Why don't you introduce me to her?"

"Oh, I didn't say I was going to marry the girl. Don't be such a croaker, Jim!" retorted Alan with a forced laugh as he set out on his three mile tramp. He was keen to be gone, for he had not seen her for three weeks.

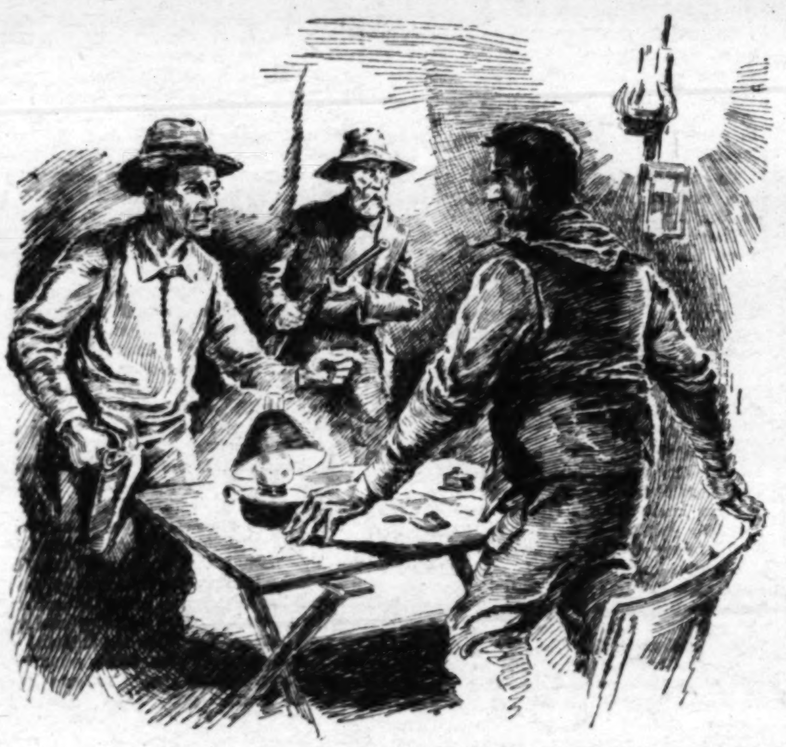
James Adams turned again to his letter, but the uneasiness did not lift at once from his mind. He was a man that took life too seriously to toss its troubles jauntily away as did his cousin. He embodied force and strength in every line of his square chiseled face and sturdy figure. He had pushed his way resolutely through life to the front, by sheer hard work and capacity. He was not a brilliant man, but he was a trusty one. The secret of his rise lay in this steadfastness. His superiors had always found that what he did was well done and that he never shirked responsibility. His readiness both to accept big undertakings and to "make good" was what had won him the appointment as chief engineer for the construction of the Short Line.

Five years before this time his young cousin Alan Adams had been left as his ward. The boy had been born with a silver spoon. His fond mother, early left a widow, had denied him nothing. He had grown up spoiled and self-willed, the kind of good looking lad whose easy scheme of life assumes that less important people were made to minister to his pleasure. To James Adams his instability had been a continual thorn in the side, but he had done his duty by the boy, had tried, not wholly with success it had seemed to him, to instill into the lad some of his own backbone and moral fiber.

But there was a strain of weakness in Alan with which his cousin had little tolerance. He drifted from one occupation to another, never sure of his own mind. It was after the subsidence of one of his tentative business enthusiasms that the engineer had asked Alan to join him in the survey. Always an out-of-doors man, the boy had joined him with alacrity.

After Alan had gone his cousin sat down and finished the letter he was writing. It was an important letter to him. In it he was for the first time in his life telling a young woman that he loved her and asking her to be his wife. Jessie Brand knew that he loved her, and he knew she knew it, but he had never told her so. He had waited, as she had known he was waiting, until he could offer with some assurance of certainty a home that would be suitable for her and the invalid mother to whom she had devoted herself since her girlhood. He felt that the time when he might speak had come, and his heart leaped with the joy of the words he was writing.

A shadow fell across the page. Adams looked up, to see confronting him two men, who had entered noiselessly through the open tent flap. They were lank cattlemen, with the bronze of the plains painted in their cheeks and on their leathery necks. One of them was well along in his gray fifties, the other a youth not five years out of his teens. The younger man's thumb was hitched in his sagging belt, almost touching the holstered revolver. The silence in which their unflinching dark eyes watched Adams was so menacing and full of hatred that he would have felt a chill foreboding of trouble even without the rifle of the older man that covered him steadily.



"That is my name," the engineer had risen to his feet.

"What do you want with me?"

"We want you."

"Me?"

"I reckon so."

"What do you want with me?"

"They call you Adams, don't they?" jerked out the older man.

"That is my name." The engineer had risen to his feet. His eyes had grown hard and his voice sharp.

"Then you're our prisoner."

"What for? On what charge?"

The voice and manner of the ranchman were tense with repression. "You'll know at the proper time. There's a horse here for you."

"What's your authority? I decline to go without a warrant."

The younger man laughed, but his laugh was as far from merriment as east from west. "This is warrant enough," he said grimly, his hand closing on the hilt of his revolver.

Adams faced him, stern and unafraid. "I'll not go a step without knowing why and where."

"By God, you will. Dead or alive you're going with us, you d—d scoundrel!" retorted the young cowpuncher in a sudden rage.

The level eyes of the engineer did not shrink. He thought rapidly. "Very well," he said, picking up his hat, "I am ready."

The men rode on either side of him, watching him alertly in the moonlight. The folly of any attempt to escape was patent. They rode in silence, save for the pounding of the horses' feet. For a few hundred yards they followed the valley road, then swung to the left up a gorge.

"We must be going to Bailey's or Steelman's," thought the prisoner. Then in a flash it came to him that his captors must be David Steelman and his son Bud. But still he could think of no reason for their strange conduct. They had the reputation of being sturdy fighters, sticklers for their rights to the last jot, but certainly they were classed as law-abiding citizens rather than desperadoes.

Adams watched for his cousin Alan, for he knew that unless the boy had taken the ridge trail they must soon come up with him. But they did not sight him, and after following the canyon for two miles the party took the arroyo that led up to the Steelman ranch. A group of willows massed in the uncertain light twenty yards from the adobe house. Here they stopped. Adams noticed that a pony was tied to one of these.

Young Steelman slipped from his saddle and caught the reins from Adams.

"Git down," he ordered.

Adams dismounted, and they marched him to the house. Another minute, and he stood in a large room not without evidences of good taste. Big windows, set three-feet deep in the thick adobe walls gave the first instantaneous charm. A potted fern or two relieved the bareness of empty space without overcrowding. There were a piano, some magazines, a few late books, a Morris chair and some leather-seated rockers, and on the wall two good Copley copies of Madonnas tastefully framed. All these and other touches of an educated feminine taste Adams subconsciously credited to Elsie Steelman, the only daughter of the family, the ewe lamb of the old ranchman, who had spent two years at the State university.

A young woman sat crouched in a low chair before the open fireplace with her back toward them. Her attitude was eloquent of dejection and weariness. On the other side of the room sat a straw-haired man of cadaverous face. Adams recognized him as an itinerant preacher of the neighborhood. He nodded awkwardly to the engineer, adding a "Howdy, brother?"

The girl did not turn her head when the three men entered the room. Her father stepped forward and laid a hand gently on her shoulder.

"Elsie," he said with infinite pity and tenderness. The girl moved uneasily and turned her head toward her father.

Adams had heard much of her good looks and his first impression more than justified the current report. Just now her dainty charm was clouded to a troubled loveliness that was finer than mere beauty. The engineer did not find it hard to understand how the rough ranchman worshiped his daughter.

"I've brought him to you, Elsie," said Steelman with a wistful little note of apology in his voice.

She flung round on him in astonished dismay. "You've brought him here? You dared!"

"I knew you'd hate me for it, but I jes' couldn't stand for to see you pinin'," he said simply.

"Oh, father, why didn't you keep out of it?" she implored. Then she turned her eyes on Adams defiantly, and a little startled cry of surprise leaped from her lips.

"It isn't he."

"What?"

"It isn't the right man." A wave of crimson flooded her cheeks even to her neck. "Oh, father, why did you do it? Why didn't you leave me alone?" she cried reproachfully. Don't you see you're making it worse. I don't want anyone to marry me unless he wants to."

Her brother came forward and took her face in his hands. "You're shielding him, Ell. You think you can keep on fooling us," he said harshly. "It is the right man."

The girl's face worked. "Don't, Bob," she implored in a low, tortured voice. "Let me go. This gentleman isn't Mr. Adams.

CARE OF THE BODY

CONDUCTED BY HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N.D.

Diet, Health and Long Life.

A FEW weeks ago I commented on an article by Irvin Cobb, in the Saturday Post, wherein he showed how, after vainly trying drugs and exercise, he reduced his weight fifty pounds, and regained his health, by reducing his food consumption.

In the American Magazine for October another well known writer—Don Marquis—tells a story of the same kind. Like Cobb, he was greatly overweight, with a big abdomen, although not so big as Cobb's. Like Cobb, he waited until he had high blood pressure, neuritis and neuralgia, was threatened with apoplexy, and was properly scared. Like Cobb, he was a glutton. Like Cobb, he was cursed with a strong digestion and a big appetite—a short cut to sudden death. Like causes produce like effects.

Here is an outline of his usual breakfast, as he told a physician:

"I eat a very light breakfast. In fact, I eat scarcely any breakfast at all. All I eat is some orange juice and some cereal and two or three cups of coffee with sugar and cream, and a couple of eggs and a few pieces of toast and four or five slices of crisp bacon. I always have the bacon crisp, doctor, because I am afraid that if it is dripping with fat it might have a tendency to increase my fleshiness."

A hearty lunch and a gorging dinner, with gobs of food in between, and yet he wondered why he was carrying around a mountain of waste, or potential disease matter.

At length he ran across a sensible doctor, who gave him a diet list and said:

"Here, eat this for a while, and nothing more. But you won't do it. The d—dest fools are the fat fools. They have no moral fiber. They lack character. They are spiritually lazy. They stuff themselves till they die. I always think it is better for the world when one of them does die. They are no good in the world."

Then Marquis bought books and studied the building of the body by food. In seven months he took off fifty pounds. He writes:

"There are compensations for all these pains and perturbations. I can go up a flight of stairs now, for the first time in several years, without resting half a dozen times. My hair, which was quite gray, is coming in black again in spots. I wear a sixteen-and-a-half collar, instead of an eighteen collar. I hope to get down to fifteen-and-a-half in the next year. I had fallen arches, and they have spruced up again. I am not nearly so short of breath as formerly. I have not had a really bad attack with my heart for some months."

Any one can do the same—if they are willing to exercise will power, self control, self denial and patience. There is no other way.

In the same number of the American is an article by Stephen Smith, M.D., who has been called the world dean of the medical profession. He was rejected as physically unfit at the start of the Civil War. Then he was a confirmed dyspeptic. Today, at the age of 99, he is keen and alert, with a pink complexion and free of wrinkles. He can read a newspaper without glasses. From three to five hours a day he is in the habit of pounding a typewriter—on which he has recently been preparing a new address, revising old medical brochures, and shaping the outline of a book, which he hopes to make a combined autobiography and compendium of information about how to live long. He writes:

"A man is as old as he eats. We should be in the prime of life at 50, and should not begin to show real wear and tear until we are past 80.

"Neither fresh air nor physical culture can prolong life, to any great extent, if one persists in eating the wrong food, or too much food of any kind. The fact that I was not well for sixty years forced me to a meager diet of simple foods. As a result, I saved my stomach, and have the use of it now.

"I have become an addict of natural foods—grains, vegetables and fruits. Only occasionally do I eat meat. And my health has been better than ever before."

As I have said, anyone can do this, if they are willing to pay the price—if they are willing to give up sacrificing to their bellies.

There is no other way.

Medical Monopoly.

DR. JOHN T. MILLER writes in the Character Builder:

"The writer was a student at a regular medical college twenty years ago, and has continued the study to the present. He has studied the newer systems of healing with an unprejudiced mind and has found in all schools of practice some truths that are helpful in the healing art. He has found some unselfish doctors in the medical ranks and counts some of them among his best friends; he has found others who are extremely selfish. In the drugless schools he has also found many unselfish practitioners who are devoting their lives to humanity's good; and he has found some who are as selfish as any who are found in the legalized school.

"This article is not written in defense of any school but in defense of public welfare. Medical monopoly is as dangerous as any other kind of monopoly, and it is recognized by many of the most careful students of social welfare that the medical trust is one of the most dangerous that the people of America are required to deal with. The promoters of this trust are irritating the people and are antagonizing every new school of practice, regardless of its merits. The time has come when citizens must unite to defend their interests."

Narrow-minded Healers.

E. W. COLLINS, who is an M.D. as well as an osteopath and a chiropractor, writes:

"The straight osteopath is narrow-minded and conceited and believes in the ten-finger osteopathy and nothing else. He does not believe in diet, proper combination of food, hydrotherapy or anything else—just manipulating the body, and the body will perform all its functions normally.

"The modern osteopath has absorbed everything that there is in the healing art. He has absorbed and is faking the chiropractor's method of adjustment. He desires to give anaesthetics and to perform major and minor surgery and in Pennsylvania they desire to vaccinate and inject serums. Many of the osteopath colleges at the present time are medical colleges teaching osteopathy as a side line so that there are no real true osteopaths today.

"The straight chiropractor is a man who believes in punching the spine, adjusting, as he calls it; and who does not believe in the use of air, water, light, heat, food or anything else—just adjust the spine and you can cure the body of anything from ingrown toenails to breach birth. Just give the recoil adjustment and everything will be O.K."

"Child Welfare."

A CORRESPONDEN writes:

"My daughter took her twenty months old baby to the 'Child Welfare' department at the county fair. The doctor said his tonsils were enlarged, and that she should have them attended to. I don't see how he could tell for the child would not open his mouth."

This correspondent fails to comprehend that the doctor was not interested in the tonsils, but in the money he would get for removal of the tonsils.

When you once grasp this basic fact, medical inconsistencies become comprehensible.

The End of Man.

DR. JOHN J. DOWLING, superintendent of the Boston City Hospital, told a reporter that "medical science" has conquered typhoid, lessened tuberculosis, and looks to the complete conquest of disease.

This is so false, that it would be ludicrous, were it not sad.

Since the introduction of modern medical methods, length of life above forty has diminished, while tuberculosis and cancer have increased at a rate that alarms the world. This, notwithstanding—or because of—the immense sums expended on hospitals and "clinics."

"Civilization" and "medical science" are killing off people. Races of men have died out and disappeared. J. H. Kellogg, M.D., believes this may happen to the whole human race, if unnatural methods of living continue to spread. He writes:

"The war-time examinations showed that half the men between the ages of 21 and 30, when a man should be in his very prime, were so far below the standard of normal health and vigor that half of them were not only unfit for military service at the front, but incapable of being made fit by training. We lose from our population of 100,000,000 by death, 1,500,000 people every year; 3,000,000 people are sick all the time. An average of seven days are lost from labor by sickness every year. Tuberculosis is gaining ground. It kills one out of every ten of our population. Cancer kills one in twenty. Heart disease, Bright's disease, and other chronic maladies are rapidly gaining ground. While the average length of life is increasing, the number of people who attain great age is rapidly decreasing. In England and Wales the insane are increasing twice as fast as the sane, and in France ten times as fast. In France, England and Germany the birth rate is declining so rapidly that if it continues at its present rate a century hence not a child will be found in any of those countries, and in this country the decline of the birth-rate, if not so rapid, is none the less definite and constant.

"The fundamental cause of our trouble is unbiologic living. Man is a very old-fashioned animal, trying to live in a new-fangled way, in a manner that no animal ever before adventured, and so unnatural and so ill-adapted to his constitution and his requirements as to render his ultimate undoing inevitable. He is by nature a tropical creature, an open-air dweller. The business man, incarcerated behind the bars of his counting-room, with his male assistants, dies at the premature age of 36 years, while the farmer, whose vocation keeps him in the open, lives to 55.

"Man is naturally a low-protein feeder, like his relatives, those sturdy forest men, the chimpanzee and the gorilla. The gorilla has adhered to the original bill of fare, and today is king of that portion of the Kongo in which he lives, not a lion being found within a space of 400 miles square in which the forest monarch reigns supreme. The gorilla dies in captivity in a few months. The imprisoned business man lingers longer but dies fifty years before his time.

"While acute disease is usually the result of accident or infection, chronic dis-

Falls and Trails of Lower Eaton Canyon.

BY FRANCES MATHILDA PURDY.

(WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY THE AUTHOR.)

COMPARATIVELY few among the friends of Southern California's labyrinth of mountain trails know of this hidden, but very easily accessible waterfall, pouring smoothly over the lip of its bowl-like rock from the height of some 200 or 300 feet and plashing, with cool suggestion, into a glistening green pool below.

The whole of Eaton's Canyon appears on the map as a snakelike dividing line between Mt. Lowe and Mt. Wilson, wriggling its way up to San Gabriel Peak, and crossing the Lowe-Wilson trail about half the distance between the two points, as it pursues its devious way to the summits. This Upper Eaton's Canyon offers wonderful surprises to the well-booted and rough-clad hiker. There are whole mesas covered with the marvelously upright, creamy waxen bloom of spiky yuccas, more poetically, and most approximately, called in the musical Spanish language "Candelabro de Dios," or the Candelabra of God. There are also one or two splendidly equipped mountain camps in this seldom visited region, one of which is reached by the toll road. Good trails through its wilderness of beauty have only been available for a comparatively short time, and as it lies somewhat away from the better known trails, practically undiscovered country is offered to anyone fond of exploring the less advertised and infrequently patronized parts of our magnificent Sierras.

However, Upper Eaton's Canyon is another story, the present article being designed to direct the attention of unaccustomed, but nature-loving city dwellers towards what remains today, from its peculiarly isolated position, a little known, but gloriously wild spot—a pocket, as it were, in one of the innumerable folds of Mother Nature's well-worn garments.

The walls of this "pocket" rise a sheer 200 or 300 feet from its boulder-strewn floor, and shut in this end of the canyon completely, no means whatever being afforded for leaving it in the way of a trail up and out, save by the path leading in. Its size is comparatively small, and its walls, being so high and steepy perpendicular, the warm sun's rays have a very difficult time of it in trying to reach the scant vegetation growing on the sides and along the edges of this secluded retreat.

The Turbid Flood is Carried Off in a Boulder-covered Area.

ITS rocky floor is without doubt at flood times the entire bed of the pool, which, when filled, reaches evidently from wall to wall. Into this, during the rainy season, thunders the double fall of water, causing it continually to overflow, spilling down the canyon and out into what is known as Eaton's Wash. This widening, boulder-covered area carried off the turbid, excess waters along the feet of the overhanging mountains, under the old bridge, past the Mt. Wilson tollhouse, and out across the flat country to the sea. This arroyo is closely followed by Altadena drive to the Foothill Boulevard.

At flood times it would hardly be possible to reach Lower Eaton's Canyon for that reason, but the summer aspect worn by this lonely glen is very different indeed. The rushing torrent, dwindled now to a silvery stream, drops leisurely and gracefully over the edge of the rocks into the quiet, tree-mirrored pool, whose golden green depths, like some aquarium of the wild, hold beautiful, red swimming monsters two or three inches long. There are darting, speckled minnows, some day to become victims of the cautious angler's careful rod, tiny frogs, skimming water bugs and many other wetly interesting "water babies." The glassy surface faithfully duplicates overhanging alders and the tender greenish yellow of young bushes clinging precariously to the upright sides of rocky walls, but is occasionally ruffled into a miniature storm of wavelets by some cool draft sucking up the canyon from below. And then this wind, seeking an outlet, and finding no opening except at the top, flies round and round, a small tornado, finally rushing off through the broken edge of the cliff from which tumbles and gushes the fall, furiously blowing the narrow stream upward and outward in a fan-shaped, feathery mist, so great is the force with which it strikes the water on its way out.

There is an enchanted wierdness about this spot, a hushed stillness, which seems to warrant and confirm an old Indian legend.

To this retreat, one summer day long ago, came a beautiful slender Indian maiden and her bridegroom.

They placed the bridal tepee so that it faced the singing waterfall, with its back to the rocky wall, and day and night the music of falling waters wooed them from thoughts of the world of strife and danger, so far away, seemingly, yet, in reality, so terribly near and unescapable.

And the young bride wove happily at her bead work, while her husband smoked away the idle hours of his honeymoon, in peaceful security.

But, while the trail into this paradise was always within range of his ready arrow, should any hostile foot steal upon it, and he knew that no other way in was possible, yet, unknown to him, high overhead among the rocks, dwelt a grim evil spirit, who had long ago chosen this as his home. Its loneliness suited his black deeds, and to those mortals who by chance happened upon it he visited his wrath in such punishment that they never returned to trouble his wicked plans.

At first the sight of these two provoked his determination to follow his usual methods, and he began by sending a maddened wind flying through the glen, blowing down the tepee, which he followed by hurling rocks from the edge above, pelting them until in terror they were forced to crouch close under the hard rock face until his wrath had somewhat abated.

As he watched them from above replace their tepee, the great beauty of the young maiden caught his fancy, and he determined to steal her for his own.

A Graceful Deer Came Down to the Pool to Drink.

THAT night, while the round-eyed silver moon peered in at midnight, he took the shape of a graceful deer, and stood at the brink of the pool to drink, purposely stumbling over a stone.

The bridegroom awakened, and seeing the object of many a long day's chase so near at hand, grasped his bow and stole from the tepee without awakening his bride.

But the beautiful doe leapt away down the trail before his bow could send its arrow in her direction, and he followed closely after, visions of surprising his bride with much venison luring him farther and farther each moment until, in the black shadow of a great mountain, the deer vanished.

The moon was low, but he started back at once, utter weariness almost overcoming his apprehension that his bride was in some terrible danger, and as dawn revealed the familiar scene to his blurred senses, he knew the truth of his fears. She was gone!

Wildly searching the crevices and ledges of what now appeared to him as a narrow tomb, his eyes at last rested with horror upon the damp cavern beneath the waterfall.

There, beneath the falling waters, whose veil almost screened her from his sight, sat his bride, in an enchanted silence, while above, and to the left, his ugly face overhanging the cavern, his chin almost touching the dripping fall, crouched the genie, a cold, contemptuous sneer upon his features, watching his prey.

Tortured with agony the bridegroom sprang to the rescue of his bride, and in midair was caught by the waterfall and hurled to the pool below, his dying call to the maiden borne away by the sighing wind.

The watching evil one still broods above the fall, and his features may be inspected by any visitor today, or brought away in photographic souvenirs, but of the maiden there is no trace, except perhaps in the slender blowing stream of the waterfall.

An Ideal Spot For a Day of Picnicking is Found Here.

TO THE idly curious alone, or those desirous of merely finding a not too remotely picturesque "picnic lunchroom," this beautiful place holds out the greatest attraction of any near by, in being so easily reached. But little exertion is necessary, after alighting from motor, or stage, at the Mt. Wilson tollhouse, beyond a slight detour around the building, to the right, which at once discloses the toll road bridge across the arroyo. Reaching the bridge, a small flight of stone steps is seen leading down into the canyon, making the descent perfectly comfortable for those who have arrived on the scene in city garb.

An interesting tunnel, from all appearances some old mine of earlier days, now filled with water and giving forth mysterious hollow echoes, offers opportunity for the curious, at the beginning of this trail. But the tunnel of greenness ahead soon offers a counter-attraction, as it wanders along the bed of the stream, twisting and turning, with occasional flights of rock steps, for a distance of about equal to three city blocks.

And just at this point is the reason why this waterfall usually escapes attention. Because, to the right, and across the babbling stream appears nailed to a tree one of those characteristically informal signs peculiar to our California mountain trails. And this, besides disclosing the inviting information that some hitherto unheard of vacation place is only some "three miles" farther, offers, for the expenditure of a quite small amount of exertion, all the well known and appreciated comforts of our mountain camps and more particularly, cold, icy things to drink. Few can resist this seductively well-calculated offer, which usually lures the thirstily investigating and pantingly hopeful climber past this point. When, only a few steps around the bend is the surprising sight of a beautiful, never before told about waterfall, wasting its charm and music upon the unresponsive rocks!

But to the real hiker and trail lover there is an even more delightful way to get there. This consists in starting from Los Angeles, in the manner sanctioned by custom, and followed by thousands of hardy "city mountaineers," along a trail whose beginning is at one of those gateways above which are magic signs. To the duly commonplace and uninitiate, these signs merely set forth the names, as ordinary destinations, of "citylets" along our great mountain chain, from Los Angeles to San Bernardino. But these sweet names, to the hordes of waiting, kahki-clad joy seekers, translate themselves in terms of canyon, mountain top and shaded streams, most of our small and lovely, orange perfumed towns in that direction usually serving also as the starting point for all well-known camps in the Sierras.

The Serpentine Trail.

Tawney rugged slopes.

Through one of these gateways the train for Pasadena is taken, and a transfer secured to North Lake avenue, the cars going east on Colorado street, in Pasadena, to the end of the line.

The Trail Down is Within Sight of Mt. Wilson's Rugged Flanks.

FROM here, down to the tollhouse, is an easy walk, fronting the inspiring flanks on which Mt. Wilson auto road is plainly to be seen zig-zagging its way up in the golden sunshine, and all too soon Altadena drive is reached, as it crosses in front of the tollhouse, surrounded by hordes of honking motors, impatient to be off up the mountain.

But the hikers follow this boulevard to the right for about half a mile, until a charming little bungalow is reached, perched on the brink of an embankment overlooking the wash, and down this embankment the polite owner has cut a road leading directly into the wonderland beneath.

This in turn becomes a serpentine trail among parklike vistas. Through green, sun-dappled retreats, it winds, past lovely spots that fairly beg to be occupied by picnic baskets and lazy Times Magazine readers, showing occasional revelations of blue sky decorated with leafy patterns, at intervals the foliage falling apart to frame tawny rugged slopes, Mt. Lowe peering over the ridge in front.

At this point an abandoned and ancient stage depot and shed appears, relic of less speedy, but probably fully as pleasant days of the past, offering picturesque possibilities for the camera from a historic standpoint, and, after a few steps upon this graveled road, that part of it is reached which is crossed by the bridge, and it is necessary to step aside that the haughty motors may spin up the dizzy heights.

From here the steps lead the way on down to the path which holds such lovely possibilities for the pleasure-seeking jaded worker, who, from only one afternoon spent in this quietly entrancing corner of the great outdoors, will return, refreshed and invigorated to meet the daily grind with a mind stored full of the charm of Lower Eaton Canyon.

Go pack your picnic basket. Leave the noisy city's walls,
And tread the loitering path that leads to Lower Eaton's Falls.

THE CRUISE OF THE U-R-NEXT.

BY FRANCES WEEMAN.

FOR three weeks William Bigger followed Myrtilla Swain about, trying to get a chance to propose. Though they were guests at the same summer hotel and ate at the same table, Miss Swain was nearly always one of a group of noisy young people. On the hotel porch the older women were on duty, and nothing escaped their eyes and ears. Mr. Bigger even considered proposing by letter; but that seemed absurd, as he was in Myrtilla's company practically all day. Finally, after he had been stalking Myrtilla for six hours without getting one minute alone with her, William sat down in despair on a bench overlooking the river. He noted the rowboats gliding gently on the placid water, propelled in an easy manner by young men, and carrying beautiful young ladies.

A happy thought came to William. He would invite Myrtilla to a ride on the river, hire a boat just large enough for two, and propose while they were gently gliding, etc. William had never rowed a boat, but who couldn't row a boat? A more inane occupation could not be imagined. William hurried to the hotel and found Myrtilla alone. Some young people were already approaching, and he hastily invited her. Myrtilla consented, offering to bring a lunch, and the day was set.

The appointed time found William arrayed in white duck trousers, white shoes and a silk shirtwaist. The nautical character of his expedition was indicated by a yachting cap. This had a couple of loose ribbon ends whose functions seemed to be to obscure William's vision. When he opened his mouth to greet Myrtilla, the ribbons took advantage of the fact to fly down his throat and nearly choke him. Miss Swain burst into a giggle, then she rolled the ribbons into a harmless knot.

Myrtilla wore an outing costume of georgette crepe with a white lace hat. William found he could rent only an old tub-like boat with its name "U-R-Next," painted on it. Myrtilla jumped up and down so that her brown curls bobbed about in a fascinating way.

"Oh, we're going to have a glorious time," she cried. She hopped gaily into the boat and William hopped after her. His new shoes slid on the damp bottom of the boat. He lurched against Myrtilla and almost shoved her overboard.

"Be careful," she screamed, and the owner of the "U-R-Next" inquired: "Tryin' to drown the leddy?" William made no reply, but sat down and grasped the oars. He was surprised at the resistance they offered to his efforts. He finally managed to free his boat from the craft around him, accompanied by a chorus of "Hey, look out," from other boatmen. Myrtilla opened the lunch as soon as they started. William found it necessary to keep his mind on the rowing, and Myrtilla insisted on feeding him. While she was untying the box, William had a vision of ham sandwiches, hard boiled eggs and pie. The lunch was packed from a purely feminine point of view, and consisted of chocolate cake, chocolate caramels, milk chocolate, chocolate covered cherries and chocolate creams. Mr. Bigger cared but little for chocolate at any time; and he was even less fond of it when Myrtilla had finished cramming the soft, sweet stuff into his mouth. He felt sickish. Myrtilla's face wobbled strangely, and coppery green lights waved slowly before his eyes.

William could not understand why the oars acted so. When he dipped them into the water they suddenly became heavy, they sank, turned over, almost slid from his hands, and dipped straight down as though some imp of the river was holding them. When he managed to pull them up, they shot up out of the water as if alive. On the whole, the boat had better manners than the oars. At first it moved along quietly, but soon became affected by the evil example of the oars. It veered from one side to the other, and once turned round in a circle while William made every effort to stop it.

Myrtilla eyed William with a puzzled look. It evidently did not occur to her that William had never before rowed a boat. A small boy in a dilapidated rowboat passed them swiftly, came back to meet them, performed military exercises with one oar while paddling with the other, and made himself quite obnoxious. He slipped alongside and with a grin, asked William:

"Mister, are you drunk, or is it the boat?"

William could not propose under such circumstances. But the boy disappeared, the boat decided to move along decorously of itself, and William took advantage of the respite.

"Myrtilla," he began, "I brought you out here to tell you—"

"Hey, cut it out!" yelled a masculine voice. At the same instant the boat collided with another, and two feminine screams pierced the air—one from Myrtilla, and one from a girl in the other boat.

"What the heck!" went on the other man. "Why don't you watch where you're going?" He gave William's boat a vicious shove and it rolled dangerously. Mr. Bigger slapped the water with an oar and a spray flew up and descended on Miss Swain's upturned face. She hastily pecked with a handkerchief at her face, in what seemed to William an odd fashion. He watched her carefully dabbing, and remarked, "Take one of my clean handkerchiefs and wipe it off."

"Keep still," snapped Myrtilla. The girl in the other boat giggled and asked:

"Why don't you use the waterproof kind?" at which Myrtilla became exceedingly angry. William looked from one girl to the other, trying to understand the scene.

"Well, beat it!" demanded the other young man. "Shove off! Git away!" William made desperate efforts to git away, but succeeded only in sending up another shower, which fell on the sun-browned face of the other girl.

"Say," remarked the young man, "you must think this is a park and you're the fountain!" Both girls giggled. William ignored the fellow, and said to the girl:

"I beg your pardon a thousand times," to which she replied, with a great affectation of dignity: "Once is enough. But," relapsing into her giggle, "it won't hurt me to get wet. I don't use it anyway." This statement caused Myrtilla's face to again flame in vexation. The other boat moved away, leaving in its wake the derisive giggles of the brown-skinned girl.

An inviting bend in the river came into view. William still hoped he might fulfill the object of his trip. Myrtilla resumed her happy demeanor and looked entrancingly pretty. Her eyes danced and her curls lifted gracefully in the breeze. They turned the bend, the boat gradually slipped toward the right bank, and William began:

"Myrtilla, I brought you here so we could be alone—"

"Back water! Back water!" shrieked Myrtilla.

William chopped the water with his oars, but an overhanging tree caught Myrtilla's hat and pulled it from her head. William was astonished to see, suspended from the hat, all of Myrtilla's curls! Her own brown hair was plastered closely against her head.

Her face flamed and her eyes snapped.

"Get my hat!" she sputtered. William obeyed. When he felt the curls in his hand he remembered his frequent desire to touch them. But he never supposed they were not part and parcel of his lady love. He handed the hat to Myrtilla, who slapped it on her head.

"Myrtilla," William offered, "you need not mind about the curls, though I always thought—"

The Reason.

A southern colored woman calls her little boy "Prescription."

"What an odd name," a visitor said to her. "Why in the world do you call him that?"

"Ah calls him dat," was the reply, "becuz Ah has such hahd work gettin' him filled."

Valuable Find.

Excavations being carried on at Delphi by the French school in Athens have resulted in the discovery in a tomb of a vase believed to be of great value, because it bears the signature of the noted ceramist Phasides, only two pieces of whose work have hitherto been extant.

FACE AT THE WINDOW.

and she heard the tinkle of the broken lens. The woman's hand caught at the sacking before the window at her shoulder. Gripping it wildly to save herself from the onslaught, she tore it away. For the second time the revolver was twisted from her raw fingers.

The man reared upward, over her. "Where are you?" he [illegible] again and again. "I'll show you!"

Outside the great yellow moon of early winter, arising late, was coming up over the silhouetted line of purple mountains to the eastward. It illumined the cabin with a faint radiance, disclosing the woman crouching beneath the table.

The man saw her, pointed his weapon point-blank at her face and fired.

To Cora McBride, prostrate there in her terror, the impact of the bullet felt like the blow of a stick upon the cheek bone rocking her head. Her cheek felt warmly numb. She pressed a quick hand involuntarily against it, and drew it away sticky with blood.

Click! Click! Click!

Three times the revolver mechanism was worked to accomplish her destruction. But there was no further report. The cylinder was empty.

"Where's your cartridges?" he cried wildly. "You got more; gimme that belt!"

She felt his touch upon her. His crazy fingers tried to unbutton the clasp of the belt and holster. But he could secure neither while she fought him. He pinioned her at length with his knee. His fingers secured a fistful of the cylinders from her girdle, and he opened the chamber of the revolver.

She tried to struggle loose, but the lunatic held her mercilessly. He continued the mechanical loading of the revolver.

The semidarkness of the hut, the outline of the moon afar through the uncurtained window—these swam before her. . . . Suddenly her eyes rivited on that curtainless window and she uttered a terrifying cry.

Ruggam turned.

Outlined in the window aperture against the low-hung moon Martin Wiley, the murdered deputy, was staring into the cabin!

From the fugitive's throat came a gurgle. Some of the cartridges he held spilled to the flooring. Above her his figure became rigid. There was no mistaking the identity of the apparition. They saw his dark pompadour and the outline of his skull. As that horrible silhouette remained there, Wiley's pompadour lifted slightly as it had done in life.

The cry in the convict's throat broke forth into words.

"Mart Wiley!" he cried. "Mart Wiley! Mart—Wiley!"

Clear, sharp, distinct was the shape of that never-to-be-forgotten pompadour against the disk of the winter moon. His features could not be discerned, for the source of light was behind him, but the silhouette was sufficient. It was Martin Wiley; he was alive. His head and his wirelike hair were moving—rising, falling.

Ruggam, his eyes rivited upon the phantom, recoiled mechanically to the western wall. He finished loading the revolver by the sense of touch. Then:

Shot after shot [illegible] While the air of the hut [illegible] smoke, the echo of the [illegible] sounded through the silent forest world miles away.

But the silhouette in the window remained.

Once or twice it moved slightly as though in surprise; that was all. The pompadour rose in bellicose retaliation as always when Wiley was angered or excited. But to bullets fired from an earthly gun the murdered deputy's ghost, arisen in these winter woods to prevent another slaughter, was impervious.

Ruggam saw; he shrieked. He broke the gun and spilled out the empty shells. He fumbled in more cartridges, locked the barrel and fired again and again, until once more it was empty.

Still the apparition remained.

The man in the dementia hurled the weapon. It struck the sash and carooned off, hitting the stove. Then Hap Ruggam collapsed upon the floor.

The woman sprang up. She found the rope thongs which had bound her pack to her shoulders. With steel-taut nerves, she tied his hands; she tied his ankles; she connected the two bindings tightly behind him. Her task accomplished, she thought to glance up at the window.

Wiley's ghost had disappeared.

Sheriff Crumpett and his party broke into the Lyons clearing within an hour. They had arrived in answer to five successive shots a few moments apart, the signal agreed upon. The mystery to them, however, was that those five shots had been fired by some one not of their party.

The Sheriff and his men found the McBride woman, her clothing half torn from her body, her features powder-marked and blood-stained; game to the last, woman-fashion weeping only now that all was over. They found, too, the man they had combed the country to find—struggling fruitlessly in his bonds, her prisoner.

On the snow outside under the window they came upon a black porcupine about the size of a man's head which, scenting food within the cabin, had climbed to the sill, and after the habit of these little animals, had required fifteen bullets pumped into its carcass before it would release its hold.

Even in death its quills were raised in uncanny duplication of Mart Wiley's pompadour.

"And so Home and to Bed."

SCENE I—THE CAMP FIRE SOIREE.

It is night, and everybody is sitting around a huge camp fire, waiting for some one with the courage to start the entertainment. There is the usual half-hearted song started by somebody whose spirit is willing but whose pipes are weak, but nobody joins in and it trails off . . . but hold! one of those present can recite Gunga Din . . . alas, there always seems to be somebody present who can and, what is more, WILL recite Gunga Din . . . or The Shooting of Dan McGrew . . . shooting was too good for him, curse him.

RECITER (in a sing-song:) It was Din! Din! Din! You limping lump o' brick dust, Gunga Din! Hi! slippery hithertoo! Water! Get it! Panee las! You squidgy-nosed old idol, Gunga Din!

(Which is nothing to what he has been called since.)

tone which can be heard all over the place:) Isn't that grand! Don't you just love Kipling! He's so virile, so rugged, so manly, so . . . so . . .

SECOND SCHOOL-TEACHER: Exactly!

RECITER (still going it.) 'E'll be squattin' on the coals giving drink to poor damned souls, and I'll get a swig in hell from Gunga Din.

(Ah, so they are both going there! Good!)
(And still later.)

You're a better man than I am, Gunga Din.

(Which isn't giving Gunga much the best of it!)

GIRL (piping up in a wee small voice:) She sat in a hammock and played her guitar, played her guitar, played her guitar; she sat in her hammock . . .

(Nobody seems to have the courage to chime in, so the song dies out, leaving the poor girl in her hammock, playing her guitar.)

VOICE: Doesn't somebody know a good story?

MA (to Pa:) You know a lot of stories; tell 'em one.

PA (scared to death:) Sh-h-h-h—

CHO.: Oh, do tell us a story!

PA: Ah, I don't know any stories; honest, I don't.

MA (who seems to have a gift for gett-

SECOND SCHOOL-TEACHER: Exactly; just what I've always said.

(Enthusiastic applause by group as Cowpuncher Guide with uke comes up. Cries of "Give us Frankie and Johnny.")

GUIDE (sings.) Frankie and Johnny were lovers—O, Lordy, how they could love! Swore to be true to either, true as the bright stars above.

(Cho.) He was her man, but he done her wrong, Johnny went down to the corner to get him a cool glass of beer. Frankie went down in a hour or so and said: "Has Johnny been here?

(Cho.) He was my man, but he done me wrong."

Frankie went back to the corner—this time it wasn't for fun; sewed in her yellow kimono was a blue-barreled forty-four gun, (Everybody joins in:) To shoot her man, who done her wrong.

Johnny ran down the back staircase, shouting, "Honey, for Gawd's sake, don't shoot!" but Frankie cut loose with her big forty-four, and the gun went a-toot-a-toot-toot—

(Cho.) She shot her man, who done her wrong.

PA (aside:) That makes me homesick for Chicago.

GUIDE: Bring out your rubber-tired hearses, bring out your rubber-tired hacks, Take poor Johnny to the graveyard, and never bring him back.

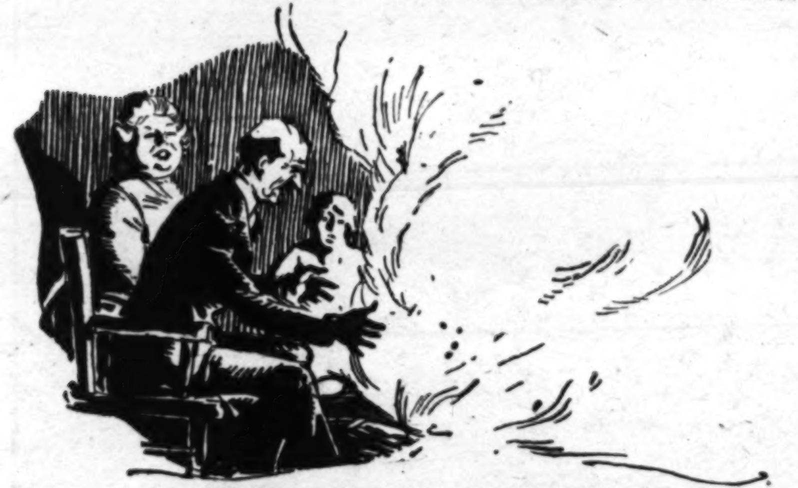
(Wild Cho.) He was my man, but he done me wrong.

(And then many more verses to tell how Frankie was locked up and tied and sentenced and electrocuted. The last scene is very touching . . .)

GUIDE: They put poor Frankie in the 'lectric chair and turned the current on; ten thousand volts shot through her frame, and to hell they both have gone.

EVERYBODY: She and her man, who done her wrong.

(Which one might call the end of a perfect day.)



"You know a lot of stories. Tell 'em one."

ing Pa into predicaments like this:) Why,

FIRST SCHOOL-TEACHER (in under-of course you do. Tell 'em that one about the two Irishmen named Pat and Mike.

(For a wonder they weren't named Ivan and Leo . . . but Pa finally is persuaded to tell it, much against his better judgment . . . he told them he didn't remember it very well . . . he made good after spreading it over five minutes by forgetting the point . . . the crowd seemed even more subdued after that until the inevitable Poison Ivy quartet got under way.)

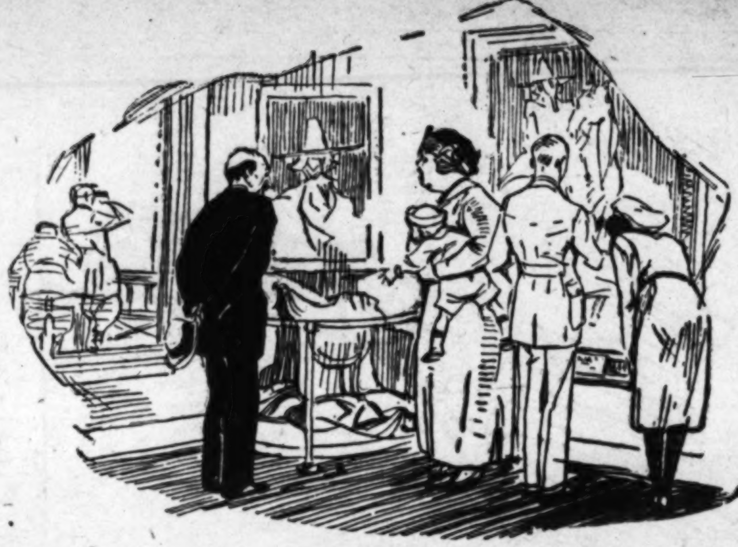
QUARTET (every one starting off just a little flat, but gradually getting together:) I got shoes (He's got shoes)—All God's children's got shoes. When I go to heaven gonna put on my shoes, gonna walk all over God's heaven.

(Cho.) Heaven-n-n-n—Heaven-n-n-n. Everybody talks about heaven—ain't a'gwine there. Heaven-n-n-n—Heaven-n-n-n—gonna walk all over God's heaven.

(Pa under cover of the music is telling a select group the one about the Negro lady who said there wasn't no justice, nohow.)

MA (to neighbor:) I'll be getting neuralgy sitting around here on this damp ground.

FIRST SCHOOL-TEACHER (after applause for song:) Don't you just adore those Negro Spirituelles . . . they're so individual, so rhythmic, so characteristis, so . . . so . . .



"Is that Buffalo Bill?"

SCENE II—THE LAST TRIP.

On the top of Lookout Mountain, a short ride from Denver, is the final resting place of Buffalo Bill. . . . Hither the tourists come in great crowds, and the Potters feel they, too, should go there on the last day of their vacation . . . near the grave is a small cabin which houses a large collection of Buffalo Billania, so to speak—his saddles, guns, trophies, pictures, etc. . . . but why in the name of all that's historic and sacred did some dumb bell install a player piano in this museum?

MA (pointing to picture:) Is that Buffalo Bill?

PA: Why, didn't you ever see his picture before? I thought everybody had seen that.

MA: You don't have to be so snappy. I asked you a civil question, didn't I?

BILL: Oh, look here's his gun. Some artillery, I'll say. I'll bet he pushed over a few Indians in his time.

MAMIE. What did he want to kill them for? They didn't do anything to him, did they?

BILL: Didn't they, eh? That's all you know about it.

MAMIE: You don't know anything about it except what somebody told you, and they read it somewhere.

BILL: Zat so!

TOURIST (struggling to express deep feeling:) Well, well, so this is Buffalo Bill's saddle! Well, well!

(Some moron starts the player piano on "The Whang Whang Blues.")

MA (who is a glutton for mortuary details:) Let's go look at the grave.

(The Potters find it surrounded by a high iron fence, which it was necessary to erect to keep the tourists from taking all the rocks out of the grave for souvenirs. Even now they reach through the bars and clinch over after them, and each spring it is necessary to pile several more wagonloads on it. Among other things on the grave is a broken coco-cola bottle—the anonymous donor might at least have had the decency to make it a pint flash.)

LADY TOURIST (reaching through bars for rock:) I'd rather have a little one and have it white.

BILL: Here's a swell rock, Ma. I'll get it for you.

MAMIE: Get me one, too.

FIRST YOUNG TOURIST (looking out over Colorado:) So this is Lookout Mountain, eh?

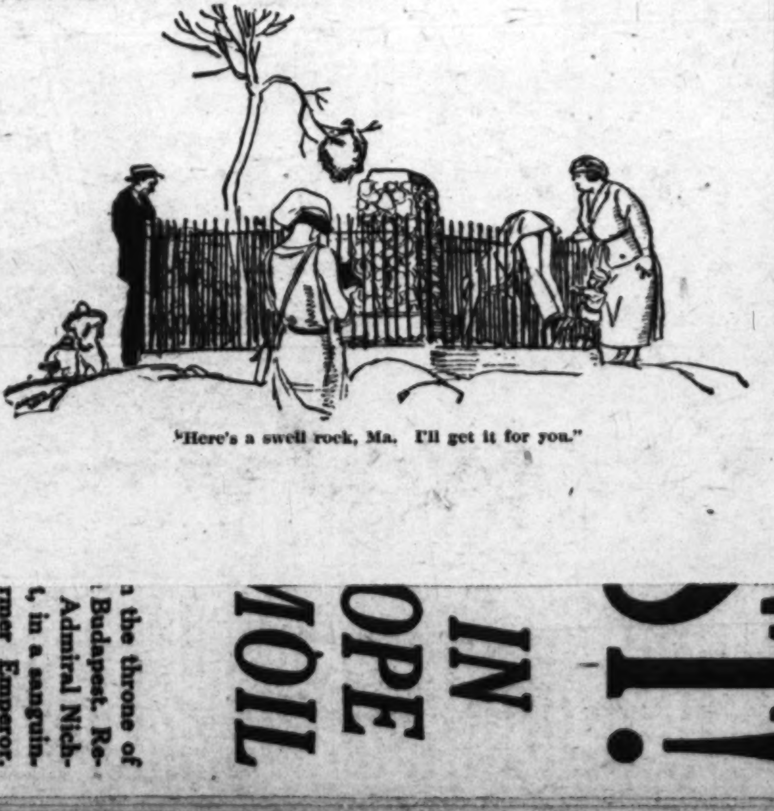
SECOND YOUNG TOURIST: I'll say it is.

FIRST YOUNG TOURIST: You'll have to look out here or you'll fall off.

SECOND YOUNG TOURIST. Tee hee, I'll say.

FIRST YOUNG TOURIST: Some fall, I'll tell the world.

SECOND YOUNG TOURIST: Thats' why it's called Lookout Mountain. You have to look out or you'll fall off, see?



"Here's a swell rock, Ma. I'll get it for you."

(The Potters decide the trip, to be a success, should include a snapshot of them posed in front of the grave . . .)

MAMIE: Push your hat up just a little bit, Ma—it hides your face . . . There, now, look pleasant—everybody . . . (snap) . . . I think somebody moved.

PA (nervously:) The bus is leaving; my Lord, you're slow. I've seen enough . . . c'mon, let's go.

(And so ends the Potter vacation . . . but that night just before they got on the train Ma got a card from Mrs. Rankin, which had been following her for a week. "We have a wonderful surprise to tell you when you come home," she read. "It's about the oil leases, too. Hope you're having a lovely time. Wish we could be with you." A wonderful surprise. What can it mean? Do you suppose . . .? But no, Ma can't bear to suppose such a thing . . .)

(And that's that—until next Sunday.)

Airmen Study Birds.

New light is to be thrown on a fascinating but little known subject—the height birds attain in flight, and more especially the altitudes at which they fly while migrating.

Pilots of commercial airplanes are to be asked to observe bird-flight on a precise and organized scale.

Air-express pilots say they rarely see a bird above a height of about 3000 feet, but recently when at 12,000 feet one pilot saw a couple of birds several thousand feet higher than he was. He believes they were eagles.

As to the height attained by birds when on migration, a theory has been held that the birds reach sometimes an elevation of 20,000 feet, but more recent opinion suggests an average of about 5000 feet.

Pilots will also report on the speed of birds. Swifts, the fastest birds, have already been known to overtake an airplane in flight. Their speed has been calculated to exceed 100 miles an hour sometimes. There is one curious instance, already recorded, of a lammergeier, a bird of prey, which was pursued deliberately by an airplane pilot, and which, in "nosediving" to escape, attained a pace of 110 miles an hour.—[Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

He Got the Extension.

Dean T. A. Clark, at the University of Illinois, was in the midst of his difficulties as the dean of men, when a young freshman was ushered into the dean's presence.

Standing before the dean, nervously swinging his green cap, the "freshie" requested that he be permitted to make payments on his tuition for the first semester, instead of paying cash in advance.

"What did you do during the summer?" the dean demanded. Whereupon the freshman replied that he had worked, but saved little money.

"That's mighty poor business, my son," said the dean, and added, "What line of endeavor were you engaged in?"

"Oh, I sold brushes for household use," came the reply.

"Oh, you did? Well, I bought a brush, gave a young man a dollar for it, and never received the brush," stated Dean Clark.

"Pardon the suggestion, dean, but that's mighty poor business," came the youth's reply, and the extension on his tuition was granted.—[Indianapolis News.

ORIENTAL RUGS FASCINATING.

ORIENTAL rugs, which represent the most perfect development of Eastern art, are as fascinating as a subject of study as they are beautiful. It is said that no one person can possibly know and distinguish the myriad styles and types, much less accurately identify each specimen as belonging definitely to an exact place or period.

We are accustomed to thinking of antique Oriental rugs as belonging to the middle ages, from the thirteenth century on. Yet authorities declare that the weaver's art reached the height of its perfection centuries earlier.

The antique rugs of the Orient are of two distinct types. The first were woven to adorn palaces and mosques; the second were for tribal or home use. The palace rugs are naturally richer, finer and more luxurious than the tribal rugs. These finer rugs are now the cherished possessions of museums and collectors. It is the tribal rug that has become a commodity of commerce. These are so various in type and style and color and design that at first thought it seems hopeless to try to classify them. But only by attempting to do so can one gain any idea of the beauty and variety of the oriental product.

Kazak rug.

Classification According to District Helps to Identify Oriental Rugs.

THE geographical division is the one that is naturally made. So, while there are many kinds of oriental rugs, it is possible to group them all into four classes, approximately representing the districts of their manufacture. These classes are the Turkoman, the Turkish, the Persian and the Caucasian. Besides these there are the rugs of India and of China, both of which are properly classed as orientals.

The Turkoman, as the inhabitant of Turkestan is called, is said to have originated the upright pile or nap, which gives so much of the mellow glow to oriental rugs. The rugs of Turkestan have, for the most part, geometrical designs, in which the octagon and the diamond appear most frequently. The Bokhara and the Baluchistan are the most familiar examples of the Turkoman rugs.

The Bokhara that is best known has a deep red background on which the octagon and the diamond designs are worked out in blues and whites, the general effect of the rug being of a rich, deep red. Many Bokharas are of exquisite texture and color, with the designs wrought with almost mathematical accuracy. Quite long fringe and wide, firm selvages are generally found on Bokhara rugs.

The Bokhara and the Baluchistans are Well Known Types of Turkish Rugs.

BALUCHISTANS, the other well-known Turkoman rugs, are less vivid in color than the Bokhara. They are usually very dark red, with minute geometrical patterns in which the octagon prevails. The design is almost lost in the dark coloring employed. Whenever the octagon appears in the design of an oriental rug, Turkoman influence is indicated. The rich dark red coloring is another characteristic of this class of rug.

Old Hamadan rug.

The distinguished design of Turkish rugs is the equilaterial triangle. These triangles are combined ingeniously into designs and borders, frequently in such a way as to produce a conventionalized floral pattern. In all such effects the triangle is found to be the motif. Anatolian and Ladik rugs, both products of Turkey, quite generally have floral borders in which the unit is the triangle.

The Witchery and the Fascination of the Orient are Woven into Persian Rugs.

IT IS in the Persian rug that is found in the fullest measure the witchery, the imagination, the personality of the East. Here in the middle ages were woven the wonder rugs of the world, produced with an artistry sustained by a feeling of national pride, which did not permit poor or standardized work. While the old rugs are seldom found for sale, those of later make are available. The rugs made there at the present time are probably the best examples of modern rug weaving to be found. At various centers in Persia rug making has been standardized and commercialized, and the output is large, or it was until the disturbances of the war put a temporary stop to the industry. As to the future of the industry, it is difficult to prophecy at the present time, but it hardly seems likely that an inherited art that has been brought to the high state of perfection that rug making has attained in Persia will be allowed to perish. Of course, this does not alter the fact that the finest examples of the old rugs are becoming scarcer every year.

The Persian rug has a wide variety of color and design, and it is really impossible to give any hard and fast rules for easy identification. The knot is the same as used by the Turkoman. Many Persian rugs are of exceedingly fine texture, there being over 1000 knots to the inch. In a single rug as many as 100,000,000 knots have been estimated. This means that the weaving of a rug was the task of a lifetime, into which the weaver put all his life's emotion, all his dreams and all his love of the beautiful.

Soft Colors and Intricate Designs Weave a Spell in the Rugs of Persia.

WHILE soft colors and intricate floral designs predominate in Persian rugs, different colors and patterns are used in the different districts. The Kirman rugs are delicate in coloring, with floral and bird motifs treated in a quite naturalistic way. These rugs are silky in texture, with a sheen that is indescribable.

In Saruk and in Tabriz rugs the medallion is much used. These are frequently quaint, so that they are provocative of much speculation as to their significance.

The Ghiordes prayer rug is one of the most exquisite types of the Turkish rug. These rugs were made under strong Persian influence, and they had all the beauty of texture, the fineness and the intricacy in pattern of the best examples of the Persian weaver. These rugs hark back to a remote period, as do most of the best examples of oriental rugs. In color, Turkish rugs are subdued, even though the primary colors are much used. These are so well blended that the effect is rich and quiet. While the Ghiordes and some other types of Turkish rugs are remarkable for their beauty and excellent workmanship. Turkish rugs do not, in general, compare with those of Persia, nor with the best examples of the rug weaving of the other oriental countries. The Turkish knot is more easily tied than is that used by the Turkoman of Turkestan and by the Persians.

The Hamadan is a thick and heavy Persian rug, made largely of soft and silky camel's hair. Its design is peculiarly fascinating and the color rich and well blended.

The rugs of the Caucasus show strong Persian influence, as this was formerly Persian territory. The rectilinear and geometrical designs of the Turkoman prevail, but the red color of the Turkestan rugs does not dominate. Odd symbols derived from religious rites and observances are often found. In colors the range is wide. The soft Persian tones are much used. Caucasian rugs have the Turkish knot, which, as has been said, is more easily made than the intricate knot used in Persian and Turkestan rugs.

The Rugs of the Caucasus Show the Influence of Their Neighbors.

SO WE see that the Caucasian rugs have some of the features of each of the other types discussed. Since there were a great many distinct races living in the Caucasus region at the period when the best rugs were being woven, the fact that different influences are evident is not surprising. Hence, in the rugs of the Caucasus we find the rectilinear designs of the Turkoman, the knot of the Turkish rug, and the blended coloring of the Persian. This is only partly true. Rugs differ so in their wide variety that only general statements can be made in regard to each class, and even these statements may be contradicted by a rug that corresponds in no large way to type.

Old Ghiordes prayer rug.

The best known Caucasian rugs are the Daghestans, Shirvans, Kabistans and Kazaks. Daghestans have beautiful shades of reds, blues and greens, with highly conventionalized designs in which the hexagon appears most frequently. Kabistans resemble Persian rugs both in coloring and in texture. In design they frequently show conventionalized animal and human forms. The Kazak rug also has animal forms, the tatantula being the inspiration of the one pictured. These rugs have a heavy pile, which resists long and hard wear.

The rugs made by the present generation of orientals, though lacking the individual charm and the rich, lasting color of the older products of the weaver's art, are still worthy of notice. They are as truly hand-made rugs as are their antique prototypes, but the interest of the weaver in his own product has largely vanished, and with it the fascinating quality of the rug. Large scale production has even been introduced, so that a few years ago factories sprung up in which a hundred or more looms were placed in long rows, with the toilers following designs that were guaranteed to take the fancy and so procure the dollars of the American buyer. Under such conditions the individuality and much of the artistry of the weaver is necessarily lost. And even more serious, if possible, is the fact that analine dyes were introduced into the Orient not so many years ago, replacing at least in part, the fast vegetable dyes that had hitherto been used. An Oriental rug that loses its color and its sheen is one that no one would care to admit into his home. Whether or not, with the settling of the disturbed war conditions, rug-weaving progresses or retrogrades only time will tell. In the meantime, there are plenty of opportunities to secure good oriental rugs, not necessarily antiques, but made after the old methods and so possessing much of the charm of even the rare specimens.

SECTIONAL BOOKCASES.

For the library select sectional bookcases unless the shelves are built into the walls. These sectional cases are well built and finished; they are easily fitted into wall spaces under windows and in other spaces where regulation bookcases could not be placed. Being of uniform construction, they give the effect of unity to the room, and more can always be added as the number of books increase.

EARLY FALL BULBS.

The early fall planting of bulbs will insure a rich succession of lovely flowers with which to decorate the house for many a day. And what is better than gay-colored tulips or fragrant hyacinths to add beauty and good cheer to a room?

AT GRIPS WITH DEATH.

I thought he was asking just out of curiosity, and so I set a price that I thought would silence him—$3000 Mexican.

"Tuan, truly will you sell it for that?"

"Yes."

He followed me to the animal house, and I wondered what he had on his mind. As a matter of fact, I would have sold the elephant for $450, because it was young and small. At the animal house, he again asked me if I would sell for $3000; then he undid several of the shirts he was wearing and pulled forth an old wallet. He gave me $500 to bind the bargain and called a friend of his to act as witness. When he left to get the rest of the money, I went to the stall where I had placed the animal and examined it.

It didn't take me long to discover why the Arab was willing to pay $3000. The little elephant had twenty toes instead of the usual eighteen. Twenty-toed elephants are held in veneration throughout India, and are keenly sought by all the rajas and maharajas for the prosperity they are supposed to bring. They are guarded more carefully and quartered even more sumptuously than the white elephants of Siam, and the price they will bring is determined almost entirely by the amount the rajas can gather together. My little twenty-toed elephant was a faultless specimen. He was about five years old and stood four and a half feet high. His head was perfectly shaped; his back was straight and absolutely even with the top of his head.

I was naturally disgusted to think that I had let such a bargain slip out of my hands, and, when the Arab returned, I blamed him for cheating me when I was sick with the fever. I abused him and his ancestors and gave a great show of indignation. He begged me to take the money and give him the elephant; I refused the money and told him to take the elephant out of my sight.

"I have put a curse on him," I said. "He will be dead within twenty-four hours."

At this he burst into tears, begging me to remove the curse. He said that he was a poor man and that the elephant's death would ruin him. Finally we reached a compromise. He would pay me an extra $500, and I would arrange transportation to India for the elephant. Then, if the sale proved profitable, he was to return to Singapore and pay me an additional $500. He swore by Allah and the Prophet that he would keep his word. So I removed the curse and took his money and he departed happily. A month later he returned and paid me the $500. He had sold the elephant to the Maharaja of Mysore for 10,000 rupees. The Arab later bought four large elephants from me.

During my nineteen years in the Malay Archipelago I captured hundreds of elephants, but none of the herds was so large as my first catch. And, though I always looked carefully at an elephant's feet before I sold him, never again did I bag one with twenty toes.

Of all the animals I have handled in my experience as a collector, I prefer elephants. They are interesting and amusing beasts, and, once broken, they become hard-working and affectionate. They never show any inclination to go back to the jungle, even when used for the purpose of running wild elephants. In Siam all the driving of herds into the traps is done on female elephants, and their presence calms the herd. I have seen the tame elephants press in upon a wild elephant, holding him while he docilely allowed himself to be hobbled.

The hunts in Siam are for tuskers, and the females are for the most part allowed to run free again to breed. The tuskers are used in the teak forests for handling logs. The females bear young about every three years until they reach an age of from seventy to seventy-five years. The period of carrying varies from eighteen months in the case of a female baby to twenty-one months in the case of a male. A baby elephant, as I have already written, weighs approximately 200 pounds at birth and stands thirty-six inches high. It suckles from six to nine months. The breasts of the female are located just back of the fore legs, and the baby runs its trunk up along its mother's side while nursing. Its next food is fruit and the tenderest bamboo shoots. It is very fond of sugar. It grows at the rate of one inch a month up to its third year and attains its full growth, but not maturity, at about twenty-five. The age of an elephant is told largely by the ears; an old animal has ragged ears and sunken cheeks. The height of an elephant is almost exactly twice the distance around its foot.

A herd of elephants is invariably led by the females, perhaps because they are the more alert to catch the least sign of dangr. If the herd is put to flight, the males take the lead, breaking through the jungle and making a trail for the females and young. An elephant never goes around things; he either pushes them to one side or goes straight through. He is very sure-footed and, on anything that looks doubtful, he will never step without first putting out a foot and trying it. For that reason, it requires some skill to build a pit-trap that will not attract attention. A pit-trap is practically useless, however, because the elephant is invariably injured in the fall; it allows the capture of the baby, in the case of females, but at the cost of the good, full-grown animal. Wild elephants, grazing in a herd, travel rapidly if they are frightened, but usually they saunter along, sleeping during the day and feeding at night. Their food consists chiefly of grasses, bamboo shoots, cocoanuts and the bark of some trees. Lone elephants and outcasts from the herd are dangerous animals and should be killed.

There comes a period known as "must," when even the most reliable elephant becomes a dangerous animal. Like the Malay he "sees red" and runs amok. A good elephant keeper can detect the madness several days before it reaches the dangerous stage, and, by securing the animal with hobbles, can prevent trouble. In the cheeks of the elephant are two small holes, called "errors," and from these holes oozes a slight secretion. One of the keeper's duties each day is to examine the holes and run a piece of straw into them. If there is an odor of musk about the straw when he pulls it out, it is an indication that the "must" period is coming. Sometimes the keeper fails to make this test, and the elephant runs amok, killing people and leaving a trail of wreckage behind him.

On one of my visits to Sydney with a consignment of animals for the Zoological Gardens, I found the entire crew of elephant keepers busy with the task of trying to control an animal that was in "must." His keeper had failed to make the test, and the elephant had suddenly gone mad. Fortunately he was in his stall at the time. When I arrived, he had wrecked the stall, and the keepers were afraid that he might get loose. Another stall had been arranged, but they could figure out no way of changing him to it. The men were thoroughly frightened and absolutely refused to risk hobbling him. The director of the gardens offered me £100 if I would do it, and, since I had Ali and several of my own men with me, I agreed to try.

With elephant hooks strapped to our wrists, we entered the stall. The elephant stood looking at us, apparently wondering which one he should knock down first. I told Ali to get behind him while I approached from the front.

I went up to him sideways, speaking to him and offering him food. He waited quietly until I was near enough; then, before I could duck, he hit me with his trunk. I felt myself spinning so rapidly that the elephant, my men and the stall were all a [illegible] a thud. Fortunately, there was a gutter running along the wall, and I dropped into it just as the elephant lunged forward at me. His big head hit the wall and the floor but couldn't get at me. He would not risk his trunk, because he realized that I would jab him with the hook.

Ali and the other men were at his tail, jabbing him and pulling. When he turned for them, I jumped up and began running my hook into his side. It became a game of jabbing and dodging and worrying him to first one side and then the other. I took care to thrust my hook always in the same spot, tearing a raw round in his side, while the other men caught him on the legs and on the trunk. We had to work fast to keep away from the big trunk, as it cut through the air, and his feet, when he kicked. Each of us was sent sprawling several times before the fight was over

At last I could see that the elephant was paying more attention to the wound I was making than to anything else we were doing; he favored the hurt side and tried to shield it. Then, with a bellow, he knelt down and dropped on his side to cover the wound.

While I kept him down, Ali arranged the hobbles; then we petted him and allowed him to stand. He got to his feet doubtfully, as if he weren't sure that he were not playing a trick on him—urging him to stand up so that we could jab him again. The wound I had torn in his side was large enough for two fists, and it must have pained him terribly. He was worn out by the fight and he hobbled off to his new stall, much subdued. Several days later he came out of the "must" period, which rarely lasts for more than a week, and became again the docile elephant that took children on his back for a ride.

I went to see him several times before I returned to Singapore, and, when I entered the stall, he edged away from me, protecting his side. Years later, I went to Sydney and entered his stall. He didn't recognize me until I put my hand on the scar; then he muttered deep down in his throat and lay down. I petted him and fed him sugar, and he seemed to harbor no resentment against me, but he did remember me in connection with a strenuous and unpleasant afternoon.

THE THRILLER.

I have never seen him before. Oh, let me go away somewhere."

"You spoke too late, Sis. He told us he was Mr. Adams."

Then in a flash an understanding of the true situation zigzagged to the engineer's brain. The men had mistaken him for Alan and had brought him here to coerce him into a marriage. With the simple primeval instinct they had set out to capture the man who had made love to and destroyed their girl's happiness. That they had acted without the girl's knowledge he knew, just as he knew that she loved Alan and had been treated badly by the careless young scamp.

"He told you he was Adams," the girl repeated. "Why, how could he tell you that?" Her eyes went out to the engineer questioningly, and something in his face told her the truth. "You are his cousin," she cried.

He bowed. "Yes, I am Alan Adams's cousin."

The pure color beat into the girl's face. She was cruelly embarrassed at the situation her zealous kinsmen had imposed on her. Adams, appreciating keenly her distressed beauty, thought bitter things of his heedless, selfish young cousin who had won her heart for his amusement.

Just then the hoot of a night owl sounded. The engineer, looking steadily at the girl, read a flicker of joy and of alarm in her eyes. He turned swiftly to her father.

"If Alan were here what would you do with him?"

"I don't know," said the old man sadly. "I 'lowed to make him marry her, but I ain't so sure now."

Adams lowered his voice for old Steelman's ear. "He's outside now. Go out and bring him in."

Steelman and his son slipped out. The clock ticked three silent minutes away. The preacher chewed tobacco steadily while the others looked into the fire of glowing pinon knots.

Again the door opened, to let in the Steelmans and Alan Adams. The young man was very white, but his eyes did not flinch from those of the girl. He went straight [illegible] and held out both his hands. He looked very handsome and boyish in his frank ardor.

"I've tried to give you up, Elsie, but I can't. I've got to have you. I've been miserable for three weeks and I can't stand it any longer. I just met your father outside and told him I had come to ask you to marry me. Will you forgive me for making you unhappy, Elsie?"

The girl's questioning eyes lit up with a radiant light. "Are you telling me the truth, Alan? Did you really come to ask me this? Didn't my father—say anything—?" Her eyes went out for just an instant in an appeal to James Adams to keep secret the reason of his presence.

"Yes, he said I'd better speak to you about it, if that was how I felt. I'm speaking now," laughed the young man happily.

A mist filled her eyes. Her hands went out blindly to grope for his. She missed them somehow, but found herself instead in his strong young arms.

James Adams turned away and looked at her father. Both men were smiling tenderly.

A blaze of gold
  Bursts in the West.
The purple, low-hung clouds are brushed with fire;
An azure sea, on its eternal lyre,
  Soft croons to rest
The Day now old,

And so Love ends:
  Its gorgeous flame
Illumes the lingering sunset of our Dreams
Which, dying, deeper, more resplendent gleams.
  I breathe your name

LADY DUFF-GORDON was discussing the movie censorship at a tea.

"Some people are against the censorship," she said. "They declare that censorship kills art. To me, though, it isn't a question of art. It's another question altogether.

Her Viewpoint.

WAYNE B. WHEELER of the Anti-Saloon league told a temperance story in Washington the other day.

"I know a school-teacher," he said, who a little girl to define the word 'temperance.' in the course of a lesson in etymology asked

"'Temperance,' said the little girl, 'means bread and butter.'

"'What nonsense!' the teacher exclaimed. 'Why do you say that, child?'

"'Because,' answered the little girl, 'when pop is temperance we have plenty of bread and butter and when he ain't we don't have none at all.'"

Antiquated.

DESPITE his shabby clothing and empty pockets, it was evident that he had seen better days. A sympathetic soul began to chat with him, anxious to hear his story.

"Well, stranger," said he, "I've been quite a personage in my time; in fact, the cynosure of all eyes."

His auditor waited in silence for an explanation.

"I was the tattooed man in the circus," he went on.

"And how did you lose your job?" he was asked.

"Well, the public went crazy over moving pictures," he replied sadly, "and mine move or budge."

Great Idea.

MOST lawyers know the troublesome rich man, who, having an eternal grievance, insists on taking his solicitor's advice on every possible occasion.

Such a one entered the office of a busy man of law the other day.

"Johnson of Mudtown has insulted me!" he announced loudly. "He has threatened to pull my nose whenever he meets me. What would you advise me to do?"

The busy writer did not look up from his writing.

"If he really threatened to do that," he said judicially, "my advice is that you soap your nose well; then it will slip through his fingers. Good day; I will send my bill in due course!"

Very Sonorous.

ALFRED NOYES, the English poet, was greatly annoyed last term at Princeton by a hoary old chestnut that some jealous American poet resurrected and affixed to him.

Poet Noyes, according to this story, invited a publisher's reader to come to Princeton and pass on a volume of manuscript poetry. The reader duly came and Mr. Noyes ensconsed him in an easy chair and proceeded to read him the volume of poems.

A half-hour passed, an hour, and Mr. Noyes, hearing an odd, gurgling sound, looked up and saw that the publisher's reader was asleep.

"Here, sir," he said sharply, "Wake up, sir. I invited you to Princeton to give an opinion on my verses. How can you give an opinion when you're asleep?

"'Sleep," said the publisher's reader with a great yawn—"sleep is an opinion."

Hard to Beat.

"PUSSYFOOT" JOHNSON said to a New York reporter:

"Did you ever see stout?" They swear by it over the water. It is as black as ink, rich and smooth like cream, and as alcoholic almost as whisky.

"One day in Peebles, as I was pursuing my prohibition campaign, a Peebles workingman held a pint pot of stout under my nose.

"'That's the stuff, Pussyfoot!' he yelled. 'Rare good stuff, I tell ye! Better'n all yer—hic—tea! I tell ye, it's meat and drink to a man!'

"'Yes,' said I, 'and sometimes lodgings, too, if he takes plenty of it.'"

Paid by the Word?

THE LATE Edgar Saltus was a brilliant and epigrammatic novelist. His own masterpieces being short, he disliked the long-winded masterpieces of his contemporaries.

At a New York dinner party Mr. Saltus once said of the long-winded Arnold Bennet;

"When you or I desire to say a thing—' 'I give you this orange,' for example, we say it and that is all. But Bennet would say it as verbosely as a lawyer does. He would say it like this—

"'I hereby give, grant and convey to you all my interest, right, title and advantage of said orange, together with its rind, skin, juice, pulp and seeds; and all rights and advantages therein, with full powers to suck, chew or otherwise eat the same, or give it away with or without the rind, skin, juice, pulp or seeds; anything hereinbefore or in any other deed or deeds, instruments of any nature or kind whatsoever to the contrary notwithstanding.'"

Hobson's Choice.

REPRESENTATIVE LONGWORTH said in a tariff argument:

"My opponent's logic reminds me of the chap who was held up by a highwayman.

"'Your money or your life,' hissed the highwayman.

"Take my life,' the chap said, 'I'm saving up my money for my old age.'"

His Dilemma.

HE WAS a corporal drill instructor, and though he had an extraordinarily fine word of command, in normal speech he stuttered—and stuttered badly.

One day a new and particularly clumsy recruit joined his squad, and the instructor walked up to him to give him a little private lecture.

"Now l-l-look here, my l-l-lad," he began. "You're about the sl-sl-sloppiest thing I've ever had in my squad. You must b-buck up. Wha-what's your name?"

There was no answer, and the corporal painfully repeated the question, but there was still no answer.

Finally the sergeant-major intervened.

"What's the matter with you, my lad? Why don't you answer the corporal?" he asked.

"B-b-because," explained the unfortunate recruit, "I d-d-don't want to m-m-mock him!"

Breaking the Crust.

A YOUNG man in a rooming-house was much annoyed by his landlady continually taking his viands. One day he brought in a tin of biscuits, and, having taken one, he put the lid on the box again. Day by day the biscuits disappeared with alarming rapidity, until only one remained.

One evening the landlady heard a great noise proceeding from the lodger's room, and on opening the door, she beheld the young man belaboring a biscuit with the poker.

"Mercy me, what's that you're doing to the biscuit, Mr. Tamson?" she exclaimed. "Have you gone crazy?"

"Oh!" replied the young man, resignedly. "I was just giving it a thrashing for eating all its companions."

"Just about that," agreed the hobo. "You see, I only washes before I eats."

Count 'Em!

GEN. COLEMAN DU PONT, Deleware's new Senator, was lunching in the Senate restaurant.

"This magazine here," he said, laying a periodical aside, "contains a long article on the best way to stop hiccups. Now it seems to me—"

And Gen. Du Pont chuckled.

"It seems to me," he added, "that a good many readers would rather know the best way to start them."

COUNT GEORGES de FALICON, of the French embassy, was talking at a Bar Harbor luncheon about the German indemnity.

"It does seem large. But Germany is a large and successful country. She says now she can't pay, but we must remember—"

And the young man smiled;

"We must remember," he added, "that a couple of years ago she said she couldn't lose."

Training for Congress.

SENATOR RALPH CAMERON of Arizona has had enough adventures in real life to make Bill Hart or Tom Mix look like second-raters, if anyone could get the Senator into competition as a story teller with the two leading Wild West movie heroes. Mr. Cameron was once an Arizona sheriff and that was in the days when there were still two-gun men floating around, the outskirts of civilization and perforating their enemies now and then with perfectly good bullets made of real lead.

So the present Senator's life was far from an easy one. He once captured a bandit wanted pretty badly for murder and bluffed 200 Mexicans and later another crowd of Americans out of their plans to take the bandit away and try him before that well-known American jurist, Judge Lynch. He got the bandit in jail, kept him there and he finally was tried and sent up for a little matter of ninty-nine years.

Plain Suicide.

THE conjurer in the village schoolroom had invited any gentleman from the audience to step up on the platform, and a youth had responded.

"Now, friend," said the conjurer, "I suppose you consider it a matter of impossibility for me to make the rabbit in that box on the table pass into your coat-tail pocket?"

"I dunno about impossible," was the reply, "but I wouldn't do it if I were you, sir."

"Oh, you'll be in no danger, I can assure you," said the sleight-of-hand man airily.

"I wasn't thinking about myself," the youth answered calmly. "I was studying the rabbit. I've got a couple of ferrets in my pocket!"

THE young couple standing with the daily "reception committee" before door B at the Union Station yesterday were unable to conceal the fact that they were unusually fond of each other although they did try. He pressed her hand slyly, and she encouraged him with a happy smile, but it was evident they felt restrained in the crowd. They talked in whispers

As the first passengers from the incoming train began filtering through the doors the young man left his companion and edged his way around the waiting crowd until he mingled with the persons coming through the doors. He hesitated a moment looking over the faces in the group he had just left. He smiled then as in welcome went directly to the young woman.

He kissed her soundly and she returned the salute.

Then they stood side by side again, awaiting the expected friend.

IT WAS a thrilling story that Brown had to tell; Disaster, shipwreck, bravery against odds, and wisdom when all wits were scattered—except Brown's

"I had abandoned all hope," he said, when his narrative had run for an hour. "It was the most hideous sensation imaginable and as I sank for the third time, my past life seemed to rise before me in a series of grim, realistic pictures. I saw everything I had ever done"

A murmur of sympathy rolled from the lips of listening friends; but just as Brown was preparing to resume, Jones who was sitting quietly in a corner interrupted him sharply and hopefully:

"And did you happen to notice," he asked, "a picture of me lending you a fiver in the autumn of 1919?"

LES MISERABLES.

"No'm. I ain't gwine let you pull no foolishment liken to that."

"It's my money."

"I ain't sayin' 'taint, honey, but seein' as I is you' future husban' I is gwine keep you fum makin' feenancial mistakes."

"My future husban', you says?"

"That's my echo."

Minervy's head went two points higher.

"A man what ain't got no mo'n what you ain't got, ain't got no call talkin' 'bout makin' ma'ige with no gal."

"What I is got is some sense. Sense 'bout racin' an' sense 'bout wantin' to ma'y you. An' I says you ain't gwine have that money ontil after this heah race is ran. So don' make no mo' talk bouten it."

Minervy did make more talk bouten it. She made plenty of talk, but it didn't carry her any appreciable distance. Finally she hooked her arm through that of Epidemic and together they took up positions at the fence opposite the judge's stand.

Epidemic was nervous, extremely so. He knew that he was taking a long chance. But taking long chances had become an absolute necessity.

He was banking entirely on Dionyshus's hatred of himself and on that gentleman's love for Miss Minervy Post. Dionyshus, he knew, had wagered heavily on Christmas Tree, yet Epidemic had bet that Dionyshus's passion for Minervy was greater than his love for money. He had played his hunch straight and to the limit and possessed of additional capital, he would have plunged yet more heavily.

"Fo'," he reasoned, "what the good Lawd give a feller brains fo' if he ain't to use em?"

Epidemic's scheme was so complicated as to be simple. He had convinced Dionyshus that he bet on Christmas Tree. No one, and least of all Dionyshus, suspected that his money was all placed on the chances of Greenbrier. The small amounts laid on Christmas Tree had been by way of camouflage, and Epidemic knew that his rival was duly impressed and considerably bewildered.

The bugle sounded clear and shrill in the afternoon air. There was a colored surge from the paddock and betting ring for places of vantage along the fence. The seven entries, with their silk-clad jockeys, paraded before the judge's stand, saluted the portly and pompous Dionyshus, whirled and eddied about under the hoarse bellowings of the starter,

The race was for one mile. It was the final event of a five-day program which had jazzed Darktown to its roots. Every available penny of surplus cash was wagered, one way or the other, on this particular race. And finally——

"Yonder he goes; Greenbrier thi'd, said Epidemic pressing sinewy fingers in to Minervy's rounded arm until that lady winced. Yonder they is . . . Hot dog! see 'em run . . . Nabob in front — that don't mean nothing . . . Chris'mas Tree secon' . . . Happy Days thi'd . . . Greenbrier fo'th."

"Tol' you you was foolish bettin' on Greenbrier."

"Tellin' me foolish ain't is foolish. C'mon, you Greenbrier! Yo' daddy's lookin' at you. . . . Yonder he goes; Greenbrier thi'd . . . "

"Third don' win no money," snapped Minervy. "Chris'mas Tree is done gone fust!"

It was true Christmas Tree had spurted on the lower turn, passed Nabob and cut in to the rail. Up the back stretch they fled; three smooth-running horses busy distancing a tiring field. Then Nabob commenced to falter. Jockey Spider Hawkins, up on Greenbrier, gave the reins slightly and the horse responded with a sudden spurt which carried her by Nabob. A shriek of frenzied delight split the afternoon air.

Then Christmas Tree, groomed for a killing and running at the top of his form, settld down for a gruelling finish with Greenbrier. The Spider was riding his mount easily; working closer and closer to the swiftly moving long shot, making his plans to take the turn safely and pass ahead on the stretch.

The crowd was delirious. Christmas Tree had been lightly played and the money and sympathy of the spectators were with Greenbrier. Epidemic, seeing the apparent ease with which Christmas Tree was maintaining the lead, commenced to grow apprehensive. He did not know enough about racing to understand that the Spider had Greenbrier well in hand for a strong finish, nor did he know that Dionyshus's frenzied search for Jockey Spider Hawkins just before the race had been unsuccessful.

They whirled into the stretch far ahead of the field. Greenbrier swinging wide and Christmas Tree hugging the rail. But Christmas Tree was beginning to tire, and the little ebony jockey went out on his neck, hand-riding the mount.

The spectators formed into one yelling, howling mob. The spirit of it probed the usually equable soul of Epidemic Taylor and directed his shouting—

"C'mon Greenbrier! C'mon home to yo' Pappy! Yo' daddy loves you, ol' Greenbrier! You is runnin', Greenbrier—beatin' hawses like'n to that is 'bout the easiest thing you does. Hot dam! hawss, I sees you comin' . ; . "

The dust rose behind the racers in a thick cloud. In the judge's stand, Dionyshus leaned over the rail and stared intently. He inbreathed audibly. Christmas Tree and Greenbrier were neck and neck now . . . and suddenly Greenbrier stumbled.

It was only for an instant, but the crowd saw. A groan of agony rose heavenward. Thrown off his stride for the fraction of a second, Greenbrier yielded the lead to the flying game little Christmas Tree.

They came closer to the finish—closer. The howling mob had become quiet now, save for here and there the hysterical screeching of some woman who had bet a dollar. Quietly Spider Hawkins edged forward on his mount . . . once he brought his whip down . . .

Greenbrier surged ahead. His nose passed that of Christmas Tree. He led by a half length. A wild paean of joy rose from the inclosure. Greenbrier's race . . .

Then something went wrong Jockey Spider Hawkins settled back in his seat. His sinewy fingers wrapped around the reins and Epidemic distinctly saw him yank at the head of his mount. Greenbrier, startled, faltered. They were at the wire now . . . almos under it.

And in that instant Christmas Tree threw the last ounce of effort into the finish. There was a leap, a howl—,

And Christmas Tree flashed under the wire inches ahead of Greenbrier!

Epidemic heard nothing but silence! And then, from the void, came the sound of Minervy's reproachful voice—

"What you knows 'bout hawses, Epidemic —jes' nachelly ain't!"

Epidemic made no answer. There was no answer to make. To himself he thought: "That ol' skunk Dionyshus. He thunk mo' of the money he was gwine to make than he did of Minervy!"

The spectators stood as though dazed. The unexpected reversal of form in the last few strides had generated a community paralysis.

And then Dionyshus Hallet rose in the judge's stand for the official announcement. The silence on the crowd became more so.

Dionyshus's eyes lighted on the cowed figure of Epidemic slinking against the rail. And Dionyshus expanded muchly to his triumph of power.

"Fo'th an' las' race," he bellowed through his battered megaphone. Chris'mas Tree come in fust, but is disqualified fo' foulin'. Official finish as follers: Greenbrier fust—"

For a split second Epidemic stood as one in a trance. Then, as the sense of the situation percolated through his slow-working brain, his figure stiffened. Suddenly he raised his head and a wild yell split the air.

"Greenbrier wins!" He whirled and leaped for the betting ring. "Wait fo' me, Minervy, I an' you gits ma'ied in thutty minutes! O-o-oh! Greenbrier wins an' Dionyshus wan him!"

. . . .

Fifteen minutes later Epidemic Taylor burst wild-eyed into the dressing room of Jockey Spider Hawkins. He found that racing gentleman excessively disconsolate.

"Tain't that I min' pullin' a hawss," bemoaned Spider, "but to have yo' own man double cross you. . . . "

Epidemic waved two hundred dollars under Spider's nose. Smell 'em Spider; an' smell em' good. Them is real genuine moneys, Spider, an' they is all your'n!"

"Mine?"

"You said it! Yo' seventy-five dollars, an' a hund'ed an' twenty-five mo' what it won on Greenbrier! An' the same also fo' me."

"Greenbrier?" echoed the dazed Spider.

"You speechified. I knowed all the time Chris'mas Tree wa'nt gwine win, an' so I hit it thataway."

"An' you also is two hund'ed dollars in the clear?"

Epidemic shook his head. "Not persac'ly. I owes all the two hund'ed dollars what I is out."

Spider divided his roll and handed half of it to Epidemic. "Tha's yo' rakeoff," he said generously. "One hund'ed fo' yo' ve'y own se'f."

"Aw, Spider—"

"Take it Epidemic. An' that leaves me with a hund'ed mo'n I thought I had."

Epidemic took it. "Honeymoon expenses," he said. Then his voice dropped confidentially. "How come Chris'mas Tree to foul you?"

Spider looked up in surprise. "Tha's the funny paht of it, Brother Taylor. Chris'mas Tree never fouled me a tall! I never been so s'prised in my life as when Dionyshus Hallet squalified that hawss. He never fouled me a tall —an' I asts you now—ain't that a funny thing what Mistuh Hallet done done?"

"Funny?" chortled Epidemic. "Funny? You bet yo' soup it's funny. On'y you don' know yit how funny it is. An' neither does Mistuh Dionyshus Hallet! But Ise gwine tell him! Ise gwine tell him the whole story jes' as soon as I an' his gal is safely married!"

My Soldier Boy Is Blind.

Back from France he came to me with sightless eyes that cannot see the face he loved so tenderly. But I don't mind that he is blind, for he might tire of me if he could all my failings see. If he could see my frosted hair, my face that's graven by the wand of Care; my form that used to be so straight and white and slim, that now is bowed and brown and thin. My hands that were so soft and small—my dimpled hands he used to call the wings of humming birds because they fluttered when he held them fast in his warm and tender grasp. He thinks I'm just as fair as when he went to France. He does not dream that I have older grown in War's mad dance where women dance alone. And so I do not mind that he is blind—for my own sake I'm glad he is blind.

Had he come home with medals and with lace and found in me a lack of grace—a lack of charm in form and face. If all the girls had crowded round and bowed their foreheads to the ground and worshiped him whose griefs I've borne—the man for whom I'm old and worn, I would have died a broken-hearted wife, weary of woe and tired of life. But girls don't want a blind young man, and so they ran away and lifted the ban that clutched my heart both night and day that some fair maid might steal my love away. And so I do not mind that he is blind—for my own sake, I'm glad he's blind.

With a million soldiers and his matchless brain we've joined the serried ranks again to fight for Life where Love shall reign. Our fighting men are stubborn words who skulk and run and will not face the smoking gun. Our words are powder, shot and shell. Our cannon is a blazing hell for coward words who will not fight—who care not for the wrong or right. Army tactics we employ, and we feel the thrilling joy when our soldier's stumbling feet fall in line with rhythmic beat. And so I do not mind that he is blind—for my own sake I'm glad he's blind.

I keep the silver shining bright. The scoured floor is spotless white. Our rooms are full of golden light. Oh, how he'd love it, could he see everything in our dear home —but me. He holds me close in twilight's hour. He gives me strength; I give him power. I tune my voice so low and sweet. I am to him both hands and feet. I am his mother and his wife. He is my child, my core of life, I am his gold without the dross. I am his crown without the cross. I am his sun and moon and stars. I am his Eros—not his Mars. He'll never know the day is gray, for he will ever hear me say: "Our glorious sun is shining! Our clouds have a gorgeous lining! And so I do not mind that he is blind—for my own sake, I'm glad he's blind.—Jennie Van Allen.

Epidemic Taylor Takes a Long Chance on Tangled Hunches for Love's Sake.

MR. EPIDEMIC TAYLOR gazed pleadingly into the eyes of his most dearly beloved.

"Aw, please, Minervy," he begged. "Jes two dollars!"

Miss Minervy Post shook her head skeptically. "Two dollars is two dollars—"

"But it's gwine to make you four hund'ed dollars. Wouldn't you ruther have that much?"

"Ruther have ain't is got."

"It's jes' the same as. Ain't I done tol' you I had a dream bouten the lott'ry which says the Baby Gig gwine win?"

"Baby Gig," ruminated Minervy. "That's one, twelve and twenty-one. Don' soun' like a winnin' to me."

"It's a hunch, sweetness."

"Hunches don' git you no credick."

"No'm, but they gits you money if'n you plays 'em."

Minervy went into executive session with herself.

"Hunches ain't no good nohow. I went an' got my ownse'f a lott'ry hunch . . . Yassuh . . . my ve'y own hunch——"

"Say's which, Honey?"

"On'y it was the Blood Gig; numbers five, ten, and fo'ty, not ary one of which is in yo' hunch. So one of us is wrong."

"Yassum, you sho' is.

"An' if'n one of us is wrong, how is I to tell we ain't both wrong? I needs them two dollars. I is buyin' me a coat suit an' those moneys was put away to pay my Sat'dy night 'stallment."

"Loant me this heah two dollars an' you is gwine git yo'se'f a bran' new coat suit as well as the one what you is payin' on, an' a shirtwaist as well."

"If'n you was to cash yo' conwersation, Epidemic, Mistuh Rockyfeller's income woul'n't be nothin' on'y the intrus' on yo' money."

"You is tootin, Honeybunch. I prospecs to be a gittin' man when it comes to money."

"Yeh, but you ain't got none."

"Ain't got you neither," countered Epidemic adroitly, "an' I craves you plentiful."

"Other men does that—men which don' have to borry money fum the gal they is co'tin."

"Meanin' which?"

"Dionyshus Hallet." A faint lavender blush suffused the racial mahogany cheeks.

Epidemic exhaled his disgust. "That bloated immytation of a three-cent screech balloon? Him? Why hones', Minervy, if'n I could buy that feller at what I knows he's wuth an' sell him at his own value, I woul'n't never even talk to no man which di'n't own at least fo' limmysines."

"He's a pow'ful figger in a crowd of folks."

"So's a skunk."

"He's vice-president of thee Bummin'ham Afro-'Merican Savin's Bank, Pas' Grand Magnificent High Potentate of the Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise—"

"Pas' Grand is right."

"Chief Mourner of The Over the River Buryin' Sassiety, President of the Northern Distric' of Alabama Cullud Fair Association, Ink, an'—"

"Never min' what else he is," snapped Epidemic peevishly. "All I knows bouten him is what he ain't!"

"He ain't never broke."

"Well I is. Ise broke now, an' I is got a chance to win fo' hund'ed dollars down to the Pool and Ginuwine Lott'ry. What I asks you straight an' plain: Is you gwine loant me them two dollars, or ain't you?"

"I ain't said I ain't."

"You ain't said you is."

"I ain't said nothin'."

"Well, I asks: Is you or is you ain't?"

"Hmm! I don' hahdly know—"

"It's a suah thing, Sweetness."

"So is dyin'."

"Fo' hund'ed dollars . . . "

Minervy went off on a new tack: "Seems to me like you would have more se'f-respec' than borryin' money offen the gal you wan's to ma'y."

"Huh! If'n I cain't borry offen the gal Ise gwine ta ma'y, what gal can I borry offen?"

"Mmm! Tha's true enuff. . . . Lemme see. You is gotten a hunch on the Baby Gig an I is gotten one on the Blood Gig. They ain't no mo' reason why I should loant you the money to play yo' hunch than they is why I shoul'n't play my own."

"Mine's gwine win."

"You says."

"I knows." Suddenly Epidemic's face broke into a beatific grin. "Hot dam! I got it."

"Got which?"

"An idee."

"Tell it to me, cullud boy; tell it to me."

"You is got a hunch an' I is got a hunch. You len's me the two dollars. I goes down to the lott'ry an' plays one dollar on the Blood Gig an' one dollar on the Baby Gig. Both win and us is got fo' hund'ed dollars. Come on'y one wins, we gits two hund'ed. An' no matter how comes the lott'ry out—we splits even. How that strike you Minervy?"

Minervy was a woman of instant decision. She modestly turned her back, fumbled at her stocking, and handed over two one-dollar bills.

"You spoke it, Epidemic. Go you to the lott'ry an' bet them dollars two ways."

Epidemic headed for the door. "Ise gone!"

He traveled the first block in ten flat. Then his pace slowed perceptibly. The second block was covered in a dog trot. The third in a walk. In the middle of the fourth block he paused and took counsel with Mr. Epidemic Taylor.

"Minervy," he reflected, "is all right when it comes to figger, but she ain't so much in the haid."

His eyes fell upon a vermilion placard announcing the annual jubilee of the Northern District of Alabama Colored Fair Association, then in progress. At the foot of the poster was the name: "Dionyshus Hallet—Presdt."

"Psah!" raved Epidemic. "She even likes that feller!"

Epidemic possessed a trust fund of two dollars and an overpowering hunch. He knew that his gig was destined to win in the immediately forthcoming drawing of the Pool and Genuine lottery. He knew that such a victory meant $400 in return for a $2 investment. Therefore, since he was destined to win and his lady love not, the logic of the situation was unanswerable; it behooved him in justice to himself and to her to place the entire $2 on his hunch.

He convinced himself that it would not be honest to squander one perfectly good dollar playing Minervy's hunch. He felt a sense of personal resentment that she should so desire it. Why, it was tantamount to robbing him of half of the two hundred that extra dollar was certain to win. Filled with a righteous indignation at Minervy's perverseness, he shoved through the portals of the lottery room and greeted Cap'n Jackson Ramsay, the portly white man, who gleaned a more than fair livelihood from its operation.

"Evenin', Cap'n."

"Hello, Epidemic."

"Ain't drawed the Ginuwine yet, is you?"

"Not yet. Want to lay a bet?"

"Yassuh—I sho' does."

"How much?"

"Two dollars."

"Hmm! You're prosperous today."

"Ise gwine to be more prosperouser when I leaves heah, Cap'n." Epidemic extended the $2. "Write me out a ticket, Cap'n, on the Baby Gig—straight."

"Had a dream?"

"You said it."

The ticket was duly written and passed over to Epidemic. One hour later that gentleman, considerably more ashen than intended by nature, staggered into the street and tore into tiny bits his hunch-ticket.

Epidemic was ill—very ill. For not only had his hunch failed to materialize, but three of the first four numbers to appear from the lottery wheel had been five, ten, and forty: Minervy's Blood Gig!

"Ain't that jes' like a woman?" he soliloquized. "I cain't splain to her, cause 'n chances is she never will on'erstan'."

He paused and then: "Epidemic Taylor," he said softly, "you is in one mo' hell of a mess. You not on'y ain't got nothin' but you owes yo' gal one hund'ed dollars. Epidemic: yo' hunches ain't no good. Fum now on you is jes' nachelly got to use yo' brains!"

. . . .

Dionyshus Hallet took the rejection of his proposal good naturedly. "You is jes' on'y a foolish gal, Minervy."

"How come?"

"You is some day gwine ma'y me."

"Says so?"

"I knows it. You is the on'y gal I ever ast that honor an' it kinder s'prises me you should tu'n me down temporary."

"Temp'ry! Huh! You says!"

The portly president of the Northern District of Alabama Colored Fair Association patted his beflowered waistcoat smugly.

"Ain't sawn you trotting around with Epidemic Taylor recent."

"Ain't you?"

"I said it. Sumthin' wrong?"

"Not hahdly."

"You an' him ain't split up, has you?"

"Not yet."

Something in her tone attracted the attention of Dionyshus: a nuance of ill-concealed hostilities toward the heretofore favored Epidemic.

"He is pretty wuthless," said Dionyshus, concurring in her unspoken thought.

"I ain't said he ain't."

"Yet you is reflectin' on makin' ma'iage with him."

"Huh! You is the knowinest man," she vouchsafed sarcastically.

Dionyshus was long on tact as well as ego. He felt that this was an excellent exit cue and he took advantage of it. He made his way dignifiedly down Eighteenth street, past the Champion Theater and entered the elevator of the Penny Prudential Bank Building. He alighted at the eight floor and paused to admire the ground glass door of his office whereupon was inscribed in vivid gold his many florid titles.

His stenographer entered the inner office in his wake.

"Gen'leman to see yuh, suh."

Dionyshus cleared his throat. "Who he is?"

"That jockey fum the cullud fair."

The suggestion of a smile curled the corners of Dionyshus's lips. "'Scort him in."

Jockey Spider Hawkins; tiny, wiry, and attired shriekingly, seated himself gingerly on the very edge of a near-leather chair.

"Yassuh?"

"Spider," orated Dionyshus unctuously, "you an' I is 'scussed this matter heahtofore, an' now I is comin' down to brass tacks."

"Yassuh."

"You is a good jockey, Spider, ain't you?"

"I sho'ly is, suh. I is been ruled offen some of the best tracks in the country."

"You c'n make a good hawss win, cain't you, Spider?"

"Yassuh—you said it."

"Mmm! But Spider—" Dionyshus leaned forward with a hint of tenseness. "—c'n you make one lose?"

Spider Hawkins's eyes narrowed. Here were words from a language not unknown to him. "I c'n!" was his positive answer.

"C'n you make him lose so's they won't nobody know you is doin' same?"

"I c'n do it so clever, suh, that even the hawss wouldn't know it."

"A-a-ah!" Dionyshus Hallet rubbed the palms of his hands together unctuously. "Confidence in you, Spider, is 'bout the on'y thing I ain't got nothin' else but."

"What hawss you wishes me to pull, Mistuh Hallet?"

"What hawss is you ridin' in the fo'th race Sat'dy, Brother Hawkins?"

"Greenbrier—the fav'rite."

"What hawss is the bestest hawss in the fo'th race?"

"Greenbrier. She c'n win under wraps."

"An'," sibilated the large man, "she c'n lose the same way, cain't she?"

"You is tootin'."

"If Greenbrier does lose this heah race," continued Dionyshus, what hawss is gwine win?"

"They ain't on'y one other hawss in the race," returned the jockey expertly. "That's Christmas Tree."

"You is shuah?"

I'se so shuah it hut's. Barrin' Greenbrier, Christmas Tree coul'n't lose that race if'n he was to die on the back stretch."

"An' Christmas Tree is gwine be runnin' at 'bout ten to one, ain't he?"

"There or there'bouts."

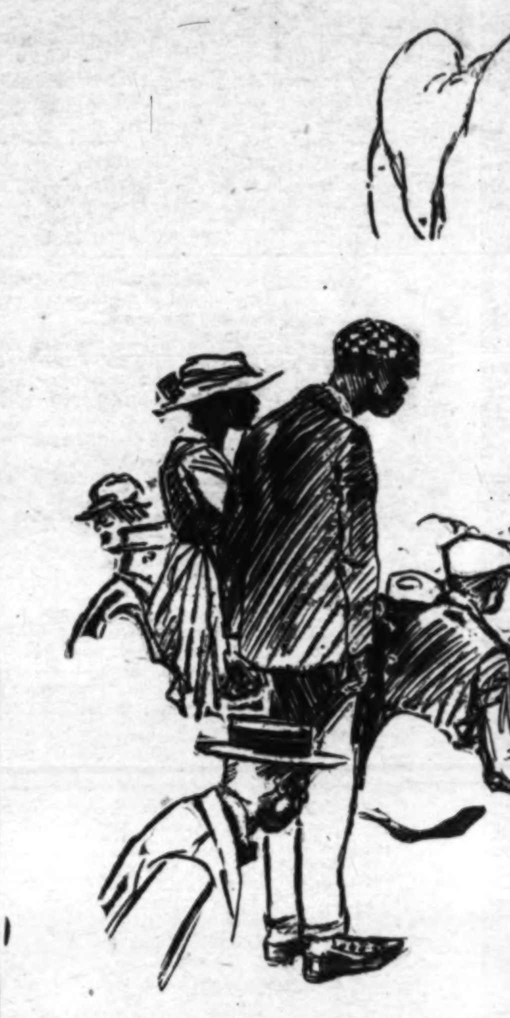
Dionyshus reached into a capacious pocket and extracted therefrom a war-worn wallet. From its depths he produced twenty crisp $5 bills.

"If'n I was to han' these over to you, Spider, does you reckon you could guarantee Greenbrier won't win that race Sat'dy?"

Spider reached for the money. "Fo' one hund'ed dollars, Brother Hallet, I'd guarantee life-long happiness to a bridal couple."

"An' also that yo' lips won't utter no soun's 'bout what has just happen' an' transpired betwix us?"

"Talkin' private afiairs like'n to this," retorted Spider Hawkins with dignity, "is sumthin' I never does. 'Tain't healthy!"



And Christmas Tree flashed under the wir

The jockey made his exit. In the anteroom sat a haunted looking negro, who stared enviously at the sartorial perfection and triumphant swagger of the diminutive jockey. As the door closed behind Spider, Epidemic questioned the stenographer.

"Who him is?"

"Spider Hawkins."

"Which is ridin' out to the cullud fair?"

"You said it!"

"Hmm!" speculated Epidemic enviously. "He sho' is ridin' a winner in the fo'th race Sat'dy. I'd like to have 'bout a hund'ed dollars down on Greenbrier. S'posin' you tells Mistuh Hallet I'se heah."

Two minutes later the rivals were alone. Epidemic's manner indicated excessive nervousness and not a little embarrassment. Dionyshus watched his visitor through half-closed eyes, probing for the reason.

"You wishes to see me, Epidemic?"

"I does."

"Bout which?"

Epidemic came to the point with praiseworthy directness. "I is broke."

"You mos' usamly is."

"I needs money."

"That ain't no news to me."

Epidemic hitched his chair closer and lowered his voice. "I jes' nachelly got to have some."

"Hmm! Got to have ain't is got. What I is gotten to do with yo' troubles?"

"You is my las' an' mos' best resoht, Brother Hallet. I ain't pawned nothin', countin' I ain't got nothin' to pawn. N'r neither I ain't been able to borry nothin' on account Flo'ian Slappy, which is the on'y feller I know which would loant me sumthin'—"

"You said it!" interjected the other discouragingly.

"—ain't in town. So I is come straight ain hones' to you, Brother Hallet, to ast you fo' a loan of one hund'ed dollars."

Dionyshus rose and jerked his thumb toward the door. "Good mawin', Mistuh Taylor."

"But Brother Hallet——"

"I ain't hankerin' on talkin' with no crazy man. Good mawin'! I'se busy."

"I—I needs that hund'ed dollars."

"So do I."

d under the wire inches ahead of Greenbrier.

"An' if'n I loans you them hund'ed dollars Ise gwine have that much less. I request you to leave me to myself"

Epidemic rose sadly to his feet. "Ain't you got no heart?"

"Yeh, but also Ise got sense."

"Ise gwine pay you back."

"Nossuh you ain't. They ain't gwine be nothn' to pay back."

"If'n they was sumthin to pay back, I'd sho' do it."

"You says."

"I knows. If'n I was to owe you that much money an' di'nt pay back you might could put me in jail. An' does you reckon I wan's to go to jail?"

"Ain't no tellin' what a man like'n to you wants."

"I'd leave town fust. . . ."

A thought struck Dionyshus. It slammed him right between the eyes. Epidemic was telling the truth: should he become hopelessly entangled in a web of debt with Dionyshus in the role of spider, chances were he'd leave town if the meshes proved too much for him. And with Epidemic removed far, far from Birmingham, Dionyshus faced a clear road to the hand of Miss Minervy Post.

Dionyshus rose and strolled to the window where he stood gazing thoughtfully down upon the traffic seethe of Eighteenth street: the clanging street cars, clattering trucks, clamorous taxicabs. Finally he turned.

"If'n I loans you a hund'ed dollars, Epidemic, when does you aim to repay same?"

Epidemic looked up with hope-filled eyes. "Ten days," he blurted optimistically.

"Hmm! That's a mighty sho't time."

"Tain't as sho't as no time a tall."

"If'n I gives you ninety dollars cash money does you give me yo' note fo' one hund'ed payable in ten days?"

"Fo' ninety dollars I gives you that an' also my las' pair of pants."

"Keep yo' pants, Brother Taylor. Yo' note is bad enough."

Epidemic laid a pleading hand on the arm of his to-be savior. "Is you gwine do it?"

"All men is foolish sometimes," replied Dionyshus.

"You is a ginrous-hearted man, Brother Hallet."

Dionyshus scribbled a check and filled out a note. Both were signed. "If'n you don' pay that back I gives you hones' warnin', Epidemic, that I gits you in the lock-up."

"If'n you does, Brother Hallet, you is sho' gwine to be travelin'."

Epidemic rose to go. At the door he turned. "Brother Hallet."

"Yeh?"

"How c'n a feller which has a cash capital of ninety dollars make a heap of money quick?"

"It depen's on if'n he's got good sense."

"Bettin'?" queried Epidemic.

"P'raps."

"You is president of the cullud fair an' you knows a heap, wheedled the little negro. "How 'bout bettin' this on Greenbrier in the fo'th race Sat'dy?"

"How you mean: what 'bout it?"

"Is Greenbrier gwine to win?"

"She suttinly is."

"Is you gwine bet on her?"

Dionyshus did some quick thinking. By inducing Epidemic to wager his money on Greenbrier he would be making assurance of default doubly sure. He had just arranged that Greenbrier was to lose. And now, should Epidemic bet on that horse and lose, the money would go straight back into the pockets of Dionyshus Hallet, who was planning to play the certain winner of the race. Furthermore, it would result in Epidemic's sudden and complete departure from Birmingham for a permanent residence elsewhere. Said Dionyshus:

"I is bettin' on Greenbrier to win."

Epidemic grinned as he opened the door. "So is I," he flung over his shoulder. "An' thanks to you, Brother Hallet."

Left alone, Dionyshus smiled a crafty smile. "The po' simp," said he, "I is gotten him hooked fo' fair now. I gits me that money back by bettin' on Chris'mas Tree an' also I gits rid of Epidemic. Ise a clever man, I is."

To himself, as the elevator plumbed its shaft, Epidemic murmured: "Dionyshus Hallet mus' think I is as big fool as I looks. He tells me Greenbrier is gwine win that race. Which means that Greenbrier ain't gwine win it! Epidemic Taylor, it's up to you to fin' out which hawss is gwine win it."

. . . .

In the smoke-laden atmosphere of Bud Peagler's Barbecue Lunch Room and Billiard Parlor, Epidemic Taylor insinuated his company upon Jockey Spider Hawkins. By dint of excessive labor he managed to lose five games of pool and five dollars to the dapper little racing man and thereafter bought the Spider two barbecue sandwiches and a soft drink. They made the street arm in arm. At the corner of Third avenue Epidemic suddenly disappeared into a dark doorway. When he rejoined the bewildered jockey Miss Minervy Post had passed.

"Why you duck like that, Brother Taylor?"

"Nawthin' special."

"You acted like you seen some one you owed money to."

"I done did."

"Meanin' Mistuh Hallet which was with that good lookin' gal?"

"He's him. Where at did they go?"

"Champeen Theayter."

Epidemic shook his head. "He ain't no slow wukker, Brother Hallet ain't."

"Hot dam! You said it."

They strolled southward in silence. Suddenly Epidemic shot a statement at his new-found friend. "You is ridin' a loser at the fair groun's tomorrow!"

The jockey looked up in surprise. "Says which?"

"I says the fav'rite hawss Greenbrier, which you rides t'morrow, is gwine lose the fo'th race!"

"How comes you to think such?"

"I don' think nothin'. I knows!"

"Then you knows; tha's all. But I says it's all a dirty shame to take the bestest hawss an' the bestest jockey an' make 'em lose."

"Tha's the way money is made," retorted Epidemic complacently. "Us is gwine make a killin', ain't we?"

"Reckon so. But I don' know who to git to bet my money fo' me."

"Lemme do it."

"How I know anything 'bout you?"

"I owes money to Dionyshus Hallet—ain't that proof I is trus'ful?"

Jockey Spider Hawkins handed over seventy-five dollars. "Bet that on the winner."

"Be mo' specificker, Brother Hawkins—so they won't be no misunderstandin'. Which hawss you means by name?"

Jockey Spider Hawkins lowered his voice. "Chris'mas Tree to win!"

The heart of Epidemic Taylor gave a wild, exultant surge. His strategy was bearing luscious fruit.

"You said it, Brother Hawkins. Chris'mas Tree is where my money hangs."

One hour later he was closeted with Boston Marble, betting agent for those layers of money who desired to remain under cover in any transaction of chance. Boston was noted for being discreet and tight-lipped. He counted over the money handed him by Epidemic.

"One hund'ed an' fifty dollars," he checked.

"Hund'ed an' fifty is cirrec'"

"How you want it bet?"

Epidemic drew a long breath: "I wants you to bet that whole hund'ed an' fifty dollars fo' me on Greenbrier to win!"

Jockey Spider Hawkins was waiting outside. "Bet it all?" he queried.

"I done."

"On which?"

"I bet you' sevum-five an' sevum-five of my own on Cris'mas Tree!"

"Good," exulted the Spider. "It's a shuah thing."

Epidemic's answer was Delphic. "You don' even know how shuah it is!"

The fair grounds were jammed. Dionyshus Hallet, president of the Northern District of Alabama Colored Fair Association, into whose pockets a tithe of every dollar expended was jingling, paced pompously about greeting friends of prominence: Rev'en' Plato Tubb, Urias Nesbit, Belshazzer Eliot, Lawyer Evan Chew, Dr. Vivian Simmons, Mr. and Mrs. Quintus Weeralls . . . they were all there, the socially high and the socially higher; a jazzy riot of lavender and yellow, and violet, and brown . . . a very great deal of brown.

Dionyshus radiated gloriously. On the left lapel of his shiny Prince Albert, he sported an enormous insignia which bespoke the fact that he was the one and only judge of the horse races which featured the day's amusement card. Dionyshus was no expert racing man, but, as he declared when he nominated himself for the position of racing judge, seconded his own nomination, and announced that as there was no opposition he was elected—a man doesn't need anything but a pair of eyes to tell him which horse won.

From the opening the annual fair had been blessed with success. On this final day it was outdoing itself. The improvised paddock was crowded with dollar-itchy humanity trying to learn in an hour as much about the racing game as professionals have failed to learn in a lifetime. The talk was of horses horsey. Down the midway ballyhoo men vied raucously with one another; concessions were breaking all records for quick and easy money. Unfortunate winners at the lottery wheels staggered about under armsful of kewpie dolls, impossible candy, live ducks and turkeys, baskets of groceries, huge hams, Indian blanket robes. Three of the four races on the afternoon's card had been run. The fourth was impending. The three bookmakers were taking wagers as fast as their assistants could write. Greenbrier was ruling favorite at five to three. A heavy play had stamped a nag named Happy Days as second choice at two to one. Nabob was receiving a play at four to one, but little attention was being paid Christmas Tree at ten to one.

Quietly and unobtrusively bets ranging from five to ten dollars each made their way into the betting ring, and all were placed on Christmas Tree. His price dropped to eight to one. Through the crowd circulated Epidemic Taylor, tense and eager, tracing the Christmas Tree bets from source to bookie and from bookie back again to source. The same always: it was Dionyshus who was laying the Christmas Tree wagers—and, being a sure-thing man and the judge of the day's races—Epidemic knew that Dionyshus knew that Christmas Tree was destined for victory: had been well groomed for a killing.

Fifteen minutes before bugle time Epidemic turned and started for one of the betting stands. Glancing over his shoulder, he made certain that Dionyshus was following. He hesitated long enough for Dionyshus to be within earshot and then he shoved two $1 bills into the bookie's face.

"Two dollars on Christmas Tree to win," he proclaimed loudly.

Dionyshus started in surprise. Epidemic turned away, then swung back and handed the bookie another dollar. "An' one mo' dollar on Christmas Tree," he emphasized.

He shoved by the bewildered Dionyshus to the next stand. There the performance was repeated. Two one-dollar bets were placed on Christmas Tree to win . . . and it was then that Dionyshus grabbed him by the arm.

"Cullud boy," rasped the big man, "is you plumb foolish?"

"Yeh! Like a fox."

"You is bettin' on Christmas Tree."

"Infohm me somethin' I don't know. An' lemme be, 'cause I craves to place the res' of my money on the same winnin' hawss."

Dionyshus felt himself traveling around in circles. Epidemic betting on Christmas Tree and Christmas Tree certain to win at long odds! That meant a young fortune for the little negro and an inevitable sequel to matrimony with Minervy Post cast in the role of matrimonee.

"B-b-but," stammered Dionyshus, "di'n't I tell you Greenbrier was gwine win?"

Epidemic met his eyes squarely. You suttinly did, Mistuh Hallet, an' the minute you done same I knowed that Greenbrier was not gwine win!"

"Y-y-y-you figgered that, right outen yo' own haid?"

"Right outen' my own haid. An' knowin' that Greenbrier wa'n't gwine win, I figgered out which hawss was. An' all that money Brother Hallet, 'ceptin', on'y ten dollars which I has spent an' espended fo' eatments, has been bet on Christmas Tree to win. An' now, Brother Hallet, I craves you to make way fo' me 'cause Ise a busy man."

Dionyshus fell back a step. "Wigglin' tripe!" he muttered, "he's gwine cl'ar up 'bout seven hund'ed dollars!"

Epidemic paused only for a Parthian shot.

"I stanns to git me a bank roll, Brother Hallet, which is gwine pay all expenses of the swellest honeymoon you ever hearn tell of. An' the pahty of the secon' paht is gwine have a maiden name of Minervy!"

Epidemic faded into the crowd. Dionyshus gasped for air. His hated rival betting on the horse which he, Dionyshus, had planted for a killing. Epidemic about to make $700 clear profit with money Dionyshus had loaned! It was unthinkable—horrible beyond belief.

Victory for Christmas Tree spelled affluence for Epidemic and a state of absolute defunctness for Dionyshus's connubial ambitions. Already the big man had risked ninety dollars to insure the expunging of the name of Epidemic Taylor from the list of candidates for the hand of the voluptuous Minervy.

And finally a great resolve was born in the breast of Mr. Dionyshus Hallet, great magnificent mogul of all things connected with the Northern District of Alabama Colored Fair Association. He clenched one flabby fist and promised himself a sacred promise.

"That gal Minervy is wuth a heap mo'n money! An' Epidemic 'll be healthier some place else than Bummin'ham. Ise gwine see he goes there!"

. . . .

Epidemic and Minervy recoiled from the accidental collision at the corner of the ramshackle grandstand. Epidemic conscripted an expression of surprised delight and plastered it all over his face.

"Well, I'll swanny if'n 'taint Minervy Post. Where has you been at these las' sev'al days Minervy?"

Minervy frowned skeptically. "Ain't be'n no place you coul'n't foun' me, Mistuh Taylor."

"Yassum, you has, too. I ain't been able to locate you nowheres a tall. I is got some money fo' you; 'bout a hund'ed dollars."

Her hand was stretched forth. "Gimme it."

"Whaffo?"

"I wants to bet some of it on this race."

"Hawss name of which?"

She lowered her voice. "Chris'mas Tree."

"Shucks! Greenbrier's gwine win."

"He ain't, neither."

"He is, too. He's the bestest hawss in the race, ain't he?"

"Yeh, but Dionyshus Hallet is judge of the racin' an' he tol' me to bet on Chris'mas Tree."

Epidemic spoke positively. "What that man ain't got is no brains, Minervy. Greenbrier is gwine win."

"You has bet on Greenbrier?"

"I has."

"Well, you gimme my hund'ed dollars. I craves to get it on Chris'mas Tree."

"Talkin' private affairs like'n to this," retorted Spider Hawkins with dignity, "is sumthin' I never does. 'Tain't healthy!"

Everything about this chic Day-frock is very new. Its material is the latest Cheney Silk—Star-krêpe. It sponsors a coat effect and discovers a clever new sleeve. For contrast, it introduces plaited Crêpe Chenette.

SMART FROCKS DIFFER IN DETAIL BUT AGREE UPON SILKS

SO delightfully diversified are the modes of the moment that it seems difficult to find two frocks that agree upon such subjects as silhouette, skirt-lengths, sleeves or collars. Upon the essential matter of fabric, however, smart frocks "come together" in choosing from the rich variety of Cheney Silks—Crêpes in many lovely weaves, Crêpe Satins wonderfully lustrous, Cheney Taffetas daintily crisp and Cinderella Silk, plain or printed—to fill every silken requirement—always of traditional Cheney quality.

Stores with a reputation for fine merchandise will be quite sure to sell Cheney Silks, either by the yard or in garments ready to wear.

It happened to the artist who drew this picture

"MY experience was conclusive. I had taken along a new Stanley all-steel vacuum bottle which with my old style vacuum bottle gave us two for the trip. The second day out my father opened the door of the car unexpectedly. Both bottles tumbled bang upon a clump of rocks—

"Well I'm telling no tales about what we said but as for us grown folks our coffee was full of splintered glass. Fortunately for the youngster we had put her cold milk in the Stanley—that bottle was not even dented."

The Stanley Bottle will not break. Its walls are made entirely of steel. It is lined with blue Amalite, a mineral coating fused into the steel itself, which will neither rust nor tarnish.

Stanley Bottles come in pint, quart and two-quart sizes. They are priced at $7.50, $10.00 and $15.00 respectively. There is also an attractive carafe model. The Stanley Lunch Kit is equipped with pint size bottle. The new Stanley Food Jar in one and two-quart sizes is ideal for use in home or outdoors for keeping solid foods hot or cold for hours at a time.

Stanley Aluminum Hot Water Bottles, though without the vacuum feature, have the same unbreakable qualities.

A Better Way Than Diets and Exercise For Reducing

Diets and exercise are sometimes helpful for reducing. But they are inconvenient and unpleasant, and usually produce only temporary results. Then, too, they are merely corrective measures. A better way is to aid the digestive organs to turn food into muscle, bone, and sinew, and not into corpulent tissue. This method allows you to eat many kinds of food which others eat and does not require strenuous exercise.

Thousands have found that Marmola Tablets give relief from obesity in just this way. Marmola Tablets are made from the same formula as the famous Marmola Prescription. If taken after meals and at bedtime, they retard the development of fat by helping the digestive system to obtain full nutriment from food. When the accumulation of fat is checked, reduction to normal, healthy weight soon follows.

All good drug stores the world over sell Marmola Tablets at one dollar per box. Ask your druggist for them, or order them direct and they will be sent in plain wrapper, postpaid.

Blackheads indicate your cleansing method is wrong

BLACKHEADS indicate that the method you are using is not the right method of cleansing for your type of skin.

A skin specialist would tell you that blackheads are caused by excessive oil collecting dirt in the pores of your skin.

To do away with the cause of blackheads and free your skin from this disfiguring trouble, use the following simple treatment:

APPLY hot cloths to the face until the skin is reddened.

Then with a rough washcloth work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the pores thoroughly, always with an upward and outward motion.

Rinse with clear, hot water, then with cold—the colder the better.

If possible, rub your face for thirty seconds with a piece of ice. Dry carefully.

To remove blackheads already formed, substitute a flesh brush for the washcloth in this treatment. Then protect the fingers with a handkerchief and press out the blackheads.

GET a cake of Woodbury's today, at any drug store or toilet goods counter, and begin this treatment tonight. You will be astonished to see how quickly your skin will improve in clearness.

A 25-cent cake of Woodbury's will last for a month or six weeks. The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati, New York and Perth, Ontario.

CRÈME SIMON

(Made in France)

As far back as the prim, dim days of the Victorian era, when our grandmothers were apple-cheeked debutantes, Crème Simon occupied a favored place on the dressing tables of two continents.

Three generations of ever increasing use have proven the merit of Crème Simon. It makes the skin soft and clear—it gives that unblemished depth that bespeaks the complexion of youth. Let Crème Simon prove this to you, to-day.

"On the Dressing Tables of two Continents."

"They are really suffering from cumulative constipation"

COUNTLESS numbers of people have a daily elimination of waste matter from the system but this elimination is not thorough and sufficient. They depend on a regular weekly purge to rid their intestines of poisons and they never feel the full vigor and zest that come from perfect health.

This whole problem is so important that a well-known medical journal has published a collection of essays on constipation. All the doctors who wrote these essays emphasize the importance of diet. As one physician puts it, "The diet has the most marked influence upon the normal activity of the bowels."

Scientists have now discovered the simple food that helps restore normal conditions, and clears the body of accumulating waste matter—just the familiar little cake of Fleischmann's Yeast!

First came the startling discovery that Fleischmann's Yeast richly supplies the essential water-soluble vitamine. Then it was found that it builds up the body tissues and keeps the body more resistant to disease. In addition, because of its freshness (you get it fresh daily) it helps the intestines in their elimination of poisonous waste matter.

Eat 2 to 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast before or between meals every day. Have it on the table at home and on your desk at the office. Eat it plain, spread on bread or crackers, or dissolved in water, milk or fruit juices. You will like its fresh, distinctive flavor and the clean, wholesome taste it leaves in your mouth.

Fleischmann's Yeast is assimilated just like any other familiar food. Only one precaution: if troubled with gas, dissolve the yeast first in half a cup of very hot water. This does not affect the efficacy of the yeast. Place a standing order with your grocer for Fleischmann's Yeast and get it fresh every day.

Send 4 cents in stamps for the booklet, "The New Importance of Yeast in Diet." This nominal charge covers cost of handling and mailing. Address THE FLEISCHMANN COMPANY, 941-945 Mission St., San Francisco, Cal.

A food with laxative properties

Fleischmann's Yeast is a corrective food, not a laxative. From 2 to 3 cakes a day added regularly to the diet will not only restore normal functions of the intestines, but will also assure a proper elimination each day. In many cases the amount taken can be reduced as the condition improves. A noted specialist, in his latest book, says of compressed yeast: "It should be much more frequently given in illness in which there is intestinal disturbance, especially if it is associated with constipation."

Beware of new and untested yeast preparations. The name Fleischmann is your protection and guarantee of uniform purity and strength.

To stay youthful looking—your skin needs two creams

For daytime use—the cream that will not reappear in a shine

You must protect your skin from wind, cold and dust, or it will protect itself by developing a tough, florid surface.

Wind whips the natural moisture out of the skin, drying it so that tiny scales appear. Cold makes it harsh and rough. Dust bores deep into the pores, dulling and blemishing the complexion and forming blackheads.

Always apply Pond's Vanishing Cream before you go out. It is based on an ingredient famous for its softening effect on the skin. The cream disappears at once, affording your skin an invisible protection. There is not a drop of oil in Pond's Vanishing Cream to reappear and make your face shiny. No matter how much you are out of doors, it will keep your skin soft and smooth.

At night—the cleansing cream made with oil

Guard against wrinkles by faithful use of Pond's Cold Cream at night. This nourishing cream contains just the amount of oil needed to supplement the natural oil—and natural oil is the skin's most successful opponent of wrinkles. Rub in Pond's Cold Cream where the lines are beginning to form, under and around the eyes, at the corners of the mouth, at the base of the nose, and under the chin. Too vigorous manipulation of the skin often increases instead of lessening wrinkles. Pond's has been made extremely light in texture so that with it only the gentlest stroking is necessary.

Start using these two creams today. They are both too delicate in texture to clog the pores and they will not encourage the growth of hair. In both jars and tubes at any drug or department store. The Pond's Extract Company, 131 Hudson St., New York.
